102

(1)

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED

No. _____ 08-251 AUG 25 2008

OFFICE OF THE CLERK

In The
Supreme Court of the United States

ROBERT LONG and KELLY LONG,

Petitioners,

v.

JIMMIE RAY SLATON, JR. and RONNIE WILLIS,

Respondents.

On Petition For A Writ Of Certiorari To The United States Court Of Appeals For The Eleventh Circuit

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI

MARC H. BARDACK
Counsel of Record
BOVIS, KYLE & BURCH, LLC
200 Ashford Center North
Suite 500
Atlanta, Georgia 30338-2668
(770) 391-9100
Attorneys for Petitioner

J. ALLEN BRINKLEY
BRINKLEY & CHESTNUT
307 Randolph Avenue
Post Office Box 2026
Huntsville, Alabama 35804-2026
(256) 533-4534
Attorneys for Petitioner

COCKLE LAW BRIEF PRINTING CO. (800) 225-6964
OR CALL COLLECT (402) 342-2831

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeal's opinion in this case improperly expands or abrogates current Fourth Amendment law, which limits the use of deadly force when seizing an unarmed fleeing suspect to situations where the suspect poses an imminent or immediate threat of serious physical harm to the officer or others, or whether the Eleventh Circuit's opinion creates a split in the Circuits by focusing on the potential risk of harm posed by the fleeing suspect in the future as opposed to the actual threat of harm at the time of the seizure.

2. Whether a law enforcement officer may use lethal force against an unarmed fleeing suspect, who he knows to be mentally ill, when the suspect is backing away from the officer in a police cruiser on a gravel driveway in a rural, isolated area with only one egress to a county road, when backup is already en route.

3. Whether Tennessee v. Garner and Vaughn v. Cox "clearly established" that a law enforcement officer's use of deadly force to seize a fleeing, unarmed, previously non-violent, mentally ill suspect, while that suspect is backing away from the officer in a vehicle on a gravel driveway in a rural, isolated area with only one egress to a county road while backup is en route, is a violation of the suspect's Fourth Amendment rights.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
Questions Presented	i
Table of Authorities	iii
Opinions Below	1
Jurisdiction	1
Relevant Provisions Involved	2
Statement	2
Reasons for Granting the Petition	6
I. The Eleventh Circuit Decision Is Contrary To Eleventh Circuit And Supreme Court Precedent	7
II. The Eleventh Circuit Decision Creates A Split In The Circuits By Concluding That Slaton's Use Of Deadly Force Was Reasonable In Light Of The Potential Harm That Bryan Long Could Have Caused	11
III. This Case Has Significant Public Policy Implications For The Mentally Ill	14
Conclusion	16

Appendix

Circuit Court Opinion	App. 1
District Court Order	App. 23
Order Denying Rehearing	App. 25

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Page

CASES:

Abraham v. Raso, 183 F.3d 279 (3rd Cir. 1999).....13

Blanford v. Sacramento County, 406 F.3d 1110 (9th Cir. 2005) 9

Dukes v. Miami-Dade County, 232 F. App'x 907 (11th Cir. 2007) (unpublished).....11

Estate of Starks v. Enyart, 5 F.3d 230 (7th Cir. 1993).....13

Ford v. Wainright, 477 U.S. 399, 106 S. Ct. 2595 (1986).....15

Hope v. Pelzer, 536 U.S. 730, 122 S. Ct. 2508 (2002).....10, 11

Long v. Slaton, 508 F.3d 576 (11th Cir. 2007).....1, 5, 6, 8, 15

Montoute v. Carr, 114 F.3d 181 (11th Cir. 1997).....9

Pace v. Capobianco, 283 F.3d 1275 (11th Cir. 2002).....9

Robinson v. Arrugueta, 415 F.3d 1252 (11th Cir. 2005).....15

Scott v. Harris, ___ U.S. ___, 127 S. Ct. 1769 (2007).....7, 8, 9

Sigley v. Parma Heights, 437 F.3d 527 (6th Cir. 2006).....13

Smith v. Cupp, 430 F.3d 766 (6th Cir. 2005).... 11, 12, 14

Tennessee v. Garner, 471 U.S. 1, 105 S. Ct. 1694 (1985).....passim

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES – Continued

Page

Tubar v. Clift, 453 F.Supp.2d 1252 (W.D. Wash. 2006) 13

Vaughan v. Cox, 343 F.3d 1323 (11th Cir. 2003) 5, 7, 10, 11

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS:

U.S. Const. amend. IV 2, 15, 16

STATUTES:

28 U.S.C. § 1254(1) 1

42 U.S.C. § 1983 ..... 2, 5

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI

Petitioners Robert Long and Kelly Long, the heirs and representatives of the estate of Bryan Long, respectfully petition for a writ of certiorari to review the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit.

OPINIONS BELOW

The opinion of the Court of Appeals is reported as Long v. Slaton, 508 F.3d 576 (11th Cir. 2007). It is reproduced in the Appendix at App. 1-22. The opinion of the District Court is unreported and is reproduced in the Appendix at App. 23-24.

JURISDICTION

On November 16, 2007, the Eleventh Circuit entered judgment. Appendix at App. 1-22. Robert Long and Kelly Long filed a timely petition for rehearing en banc on December 7, 2007. The Eleventh Circuit entered an order denying the petition on May 27, 2008. Appendix at App. 25-26. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. § 1254(1).

RELEVANT PROVISIONS INCLUDED

Petitioners Robert Long and Kelly Long seek damages for the violation of the Fourth Amendment rights of Bryan Long pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983. The Fourth Amendment to the United States Constitution provides that "[t]he right of the people to be secure in their person, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated . . . "

STATEMENT

This is a 42 U.S.C. § 1983 action arising out of the fatal shooting of Bryan Long by Lauderdale County, Alabama Deputy Sheriff Jimmie Ray Slaton, Jr. on May 25, 2005 in the driveway of Mr. Long's home in a rural area outside of Florence, Alabama. Petitioners sued Slaton for violating Bryan Long's Fourth Amendment rights through the excessive use of deadly force when Bryan Long posed no imminent or immediate threat of serious physical harm to Deputy Slaton or others at the time he was fatally shot.[1] Based on the reasoning of the Eleventh Circuit, law enforcement officers may now use deadly force to seize an unarmed suspect fleeing in a vehicle based on the potential harm that the suspect could cause.

[1] Petitioners also sued Sheriff Ronnie Willis for his failure to train Slaton in the proper use of deadly force. Without addressing the merits, the Eleventh Circuit reversed the District Court's denial of Sheriff Willis' motion to dismiss on the grounds the Petitioners failed to state a viable claim against Slaton.

1. Incident Giving Rise to Fatal Shooting

At the motion to dismiss stage of this case, the only facts before this Court are those alleged by Petitioners in their Complaint.

On May 25, 2005 Bryan Long resided at his father's home outside of Florence, Alabama. (R1-1-2). The shooting occurred on the Long property, which sits on 18 acres. (R1-1-2, 4). The Long home is approximately a half a mile away from the nearest neighbor's home. Id. The road that Long's driveway connects with has only one ingress and egress – a County road three quarters of a mile long. Id. Long's driveway is approximately 250 feet long. (R1-1-2, 3).

On May 25, 2005, Bryan Long's father, Dr. Robert Long, sought to have Bryan committed to a local hospital because of his belief that Bryan was suffering from a psychotic episode. (R1-1-3). Dr. Long was unable to have Bryan committed due to a lack of available hospital beds, so, on the way home, he called the Lauderdale County Sheriff's Department requesting assistance with Bryan due to his psychosis. Id. Dr. Long then arrived home and waited for the deputies to arrive. Id.

Shortly thereafter, Respondent Slaton, a Lauderdale County Deputy Sherriff, arrived alone, pulled up the 250-foot driveway, and parked behind Dr. Long's vehicle. Id. Slaton left his keys in the ignition of his cruiser and left the driver's door open. Id. Slaton spoke with Dr. Long, who explained Bryan's mental illness and his desire for Bryan to be detained. Id. Dr. Long also advised Slaton that Bryan had not been physically violent with him. Id. Slaton was familiar with Bryan and had never had any major problem with him. (R1-1-4). Slaton then approached Bryan Long, informed him that he was going to jail, and pulled out handcuffs. (R1-1-3). Bryan voiced his disagreement, ran to Slaton's vehicle, and got inside. Id. Slaton ran to the driver's side of his vehicle, and threatened to shoot Bryan if he did not get out of the car. (R1-1-4). Bryan put the car in reverse and backed down the driveway, away from Slaton and Dr. Long. Id.

At the time Bryan Long began backing down his driveway away from Slaton, backup law enforcement was already en route. Id. At all relevant times, Bryan Long was unarmed. Id. When Bryan began backing down the driveway away from Slaton and Dr. Long, Slaton, without first attempting non-deadly force in an effort to stop Bryan, fired three shots at Bryan. (R1-1-4, 5). One shot went through the windshield and fatally struck Bryan in the left chest. (R1-1-4). Respondent Willis was, at all relevant times, the Sheriff of Lauderdale County and the supervisor of Slaton. (R1-1).

2. District Court Proceedings

Pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983, Petitioners brought this action against Respondent Jimmie Ray Slaton, Jr. in his individual capacity alleging that his use of deadly force violated Bryan Long's constitutional rights. Petitioners also sued Sheriff Willis on the grounds that his department did not have a constitutionally compliant use of deadly force policy and/or that he failed to properly train Slaton regarding such use of deadly force policy. Respondents moved to dismiss qualified immunity grounds. (R1-7, R1-8). The District Court denied the Respondents' motion to dismiss in its entirety (Appendix at App. 23-24), and Respondents appealed.

3. Decisions of the Eleventh Circuit

Slaton and Willis appealed the District Court's denial of qualified immunity. The Eleventh Circuit reversed, finding that Petitioners' Complaint failed to state a claim for the violation of Bryan Long's Fourth Amendment rights on the grounds that Slaton's use of deadly force was reasonable in light of the potential harm Long posed to others. Long v. Slaton, 508 F.3d 576, 593 (11th Cir. 2007). The Eleventh Circuit alternatively held that even if there was a constitutional violation, that the law was not clearly established, despite its holding in Vaughan v. Cox, 343 F.3d 1323, 1330 (11th Cir. 2003) in which the Eleventh Circuit found that officers were not entitled to qualified immunity in a case "more fraught with immediate threat than those in the instant case." Long, 508 F.3d at 586 (Forrestor, J., dissenting).

Petitioners timely filed a petition for rehearing en banc, based on the panel's expansion or abrogation of Eleventh Circuit and Supreme Court precedent limiting the use of deadly force against an unarmed fleeing suspect to those situations where the suspect poses an imminent or immediate threat of serious bodily harm to the officer or others. The petition was denied. Appendix at App. 25-26.

REASONS FOR GRANTING OF THE PETITION

This Court should grant Petitioners' petition because the Eleventh Circuit's opinion creates a new standard, in contradiction of Supreme Court precedent, for determining when the use of deadly force to seize an unarmed fleeing suspect is reasonable. The Eleventh Circuit's opinion also creates a split in the Circuits by focusing on the potential risk of harm posed by the fleeing suspect in the future, as opposed to the threat of harm at the time of the seizure. The Eleventh Circuit's opinion further creates a split in the Circuits on the issue of whether the mere operation of a stolen police cruiser by a fleeing suspect who is in an altered state of mind constitutes a threat of harm justifying the use of deadly force. Furthermore, the Eleventh Circuit's finding that Bryan Long's mental state was a justification for the use of deadly force has serious public policy implications for the mentally ill.

I. THE ELEVENTH CIRCUIT DECISION IS CONTRARY TO ELEVENTH CIRCUIT AND SUPREME COURT PRECEDENT.

"A police officer may not seize an unarmed, non dangerous suspect by shooting him dead" and "the use of deadly force to prevent the escape of all felony suspects whatever the circumstances, is unconstitutionally unreasonable." Tennessee v. Garner, 471 U.S. 1, 11, 105 S. Ct. 1694, 1701 (1985). Thus, a law enforcement officer may only > use deadly force to seize a fleeing felony suspect when the officer (1) 'has probable cause to believe that the suspect poses a threat of serious physical harm, either to the officer or to others' or 'that he has committed a crime involving the infliction or threatened infliction of serious physical harm;' (2) reasonably believes that the use of deadly force was necessary to prevent escape; and (3) has given some warning about the possible use of deadly force, if feasible.

See, Vaughan v. Cox, 343 F.3d at 1323, 1329-30 (11th Cir. 2003) (citing to and discussing Garner). The threat of serious physical harm under (1) must be immediate or imminent. Id. See also, Scott v. Harris, ___ U.S. ___, 127 S. Ct. 1769, 1779 (2007) (finding officer's use of deadly force reasonable where car chase initiated by respondent "posed a substantial and immediate risk of serious physical injury to others").

However, in holding that Slaton's use of deadly force against Long was reasonable, the Eleventh Circuit based its decision on the "potential" danger Long posed as a mentally-unstable suspect in control of a police vehicle. Long, 508 F.3d at 582-83. By focusing only on speculative future dangers Long might have posed to others – and by disregarding, if not conceding, that Bryan posed no immediate danger – the Eleventh Circuit's decision directly contradicts the Supreme Court's decisions in Scott and in Garner, 471 U.S. at 11, 105 S. Ct. at 1701 (1985) ("Where the suspect poses no immediate threat to the officer and no threat to others, the harm resulting from failing to apprehend him does not justify the use of deadly force to do so.").

Despite long-standing precedent requiring that an unarmed, fleeing suspect pose an imminent or immediate threat to the officer or others before an officer can use deadly force to seize him, the Eleventh Circuit nonetheless based its ruling on the potential, rather than immediate threat of harm Bryan Long posed. The Eleventh Circuit acknowledged that Long "had not yet used the police cruiser as a deadly weapon" but then went on to hold that Slaton's shooting of Long was a reasonable "means of preventing Long's escape and preventing potential harm to others." Long, 508 F.3d at 583 (emphasis added).

Although the Eleventh Circuit cited to several cases for the proposition that the threat of danger is to be assessed not just at the moment, but also if the chase went on (Id. at 582-83), the cases cited all involve prior or more immediate threatening or violent conduct by the fleeing suspect. See, Pace v. Capobianco, 283 F.3d 1275, 1277 (11th Cir. 2002) (suspect continued high speed chase in demonstratively dangerous way, "almost hit an elderly motorist head-on" and turned his car toward pursuing officers); Blanford v. Sacramento County, 406 F.3d 1110, 1116-19 (9th Cir. 2005) (suspect with sword attempting to enter possibly occupied house); Montoute v. Carr, 114 F.3d 181, 185 (11th Cir. 1997) (suspect carrying sawed-off shotgun on city streets refused repeated orders to drop gun which he had already fired).

Thus, although the Eleventh Circuit acknowledged the "imminent or immediate threat of serious physical harm" requirement, it nevertheless applied a new standard involving the potential risk of harm. This new standard expands, if not abrogates, the Supreme Court's long line of precedent from Garner through Scott. Therefore, the Eleventh Circuit's opinion merits review by the Supreme Court.

The Eleventh Circuit opinion also contradicts its own precedent, as well as Garner, in holding that the law was not clearly established that shooting Bryan Long under the circumstances in this case would violate Long's constitutional rights. As of May 25, 2005, the law in the United States was clearly established that an officer may not use deadly force against a fleeing suspect unless that suspect poses an imminent risk of serious physical harm. Garner, 471 U.S. at 11-12, 105 S. Ct. at 1701. A general constitutional rule can provide fair warning to officers that their conduct violates a constitutional right, "even though the very action in question has [not] previously been held unlawful." Hope v. Pelzer, 536 U.S. 730, 741, 122 S. Ct. 2508, 2516 (2002). In fact, officers can "be on notice that their conduct violates established law even in novel factual circumstances." Id. (rejecting requirement that prior cases be fundamentally similar).

While the general constitutional rule established by Garner provided sufficient "fair warning" to officers, the Eleventh's Circuit's opinion in Vaughan v. Cox provided even further notice to officers that shooting a suspect fleeing in a vehicle was unlawful where the suspect had not first driven such vehicle in a manner which posed an imminent threat of serious physical harm to the officer or others. 343 F.3d at 1331. If the law was clearly established as of May 25, 2005, that the use of deadly force could be considered unlawful under the more egregious facts in Vaughan (shooting into a stolen vehicle that had resisted two rolling roadblock attempts on a United States Interstate and was moving toward heavier traffic in a metropolitan area), then the law was also clearly established that shooting a fleeing, unarmed, previously non-violent, mentally ill suspect, while that suspect is backing away from the officer in a vehicle on a gravel driveway in a rural, isolated area with only one egress to a county road while backup is en route, would be a violation of the suspect's Fourth Amendment rights. See also, Dukes v. Miami-Dade County, 232 F. App'x 907, 912-13 (11th Cir. 2007) (unpublished) (holding that the plaintiffs "sufficiently alleged a constitutional violation that is clearly established" where complaint alleged that a police officer shot one of the plaintiffs as he tried to break free of a police vehicle blockade of his car). Because the Eleventh Circuit's opinion contradicts its precedent in Vaughan and Dukes and Supreme Court precedent in Garner and Hope, this opinion should be reviewed by the Supreme Court.

II. THE ELEVENTH CIRCUIT DECISION CREATES A SPLIT IN THE CIRCUITS BY CONCLUDING THAT SLATON'S USE OF DEADLY FORCE WAS REASONABLE IN LIGHT OF THE POTENTIAL HARM THAT BRYAN LONG COULD HAVE CAUSED.

The Eleventh Circuit's holding that Slaton's use of deadly force was reasonable, because of the potential risk of harm that Long posed to others, conflicts with the law in other Circuits, which determine reasonableness based upon the threat to the officer or others at the time of the shooting. For example, in the factually similar case of Smith v. Cupp, 430 F.3d 766, 769-70 (6th Cir. 2005), the plaintiff, who had been placed in the back of a police cruiser in a McDonald's parking lot, stole the police cruiser and attempted to leave the parking lot. The officer fired four shots at the plaintiff, striking him with the final shot. Id. at 770. The facts, as taken in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, were that the plaintiff was trying to flee the scene, was not trying to run over the officer and that "all of the shots were fired either after the cruiser was passing [the officer], or, at the very earliest, while the cruiser was passing [the officer] with the officer on the driver-side of the vehicle." Id. Based on this evidence, the Sixth Circuit held that the officer's use of deadly force was unreasonable because the shots were fired after the cruiser was past him; therefore, there was no immediate danger to anyone in the vicinity. Id. at 774.

Thus, the Sixth Circuit's decision was based upon the threat that the fleeing suspect posed at the time of the shooting and not at some potential point in the future. In fact, the Sixth Circuit addressed the issue of the plaintiff driving off in a police cruiser and specifically held that "[a]lthough there was some danger to the public from Smith's driving off in a stolen police car, the danger presented by Smith was not so grave as to justify the use of deadly force." Id. (emphasis added). Furthermore, Long's mental condition does not distinguish this case from Cupp, as the suspect in Cupp was believed "to be somewhat impaired." 430 F.3d at 769.

Where the Eleventh Circuit's opinion found that Long's operation of a police cruiser was one of two factors justifying the use of deadly force, the Sixth Circuit's decision in Cupp found exactly the opposite – that the mere fact that the suspect, in an altered state of mind, fled in a police cruiser did not pose a threat justifying the use of deadly force. Furthermore, the Sixth Circuit assessed the threat at the time of the shooting as opposed to a potential future threat. See also, Abraham v. Raso, 183 F.3d 279, 293 (3rd Cir. 1999) (denying qualified immunity to an officer who shot an intoxicated, fleeing shoplifting suspect based on evidence that shots were fired at the suspect from the side of his car as the suspect was backing away from officer, even though in a mall parking lot where suspect had hit a parked car and resisted commands to get out of his car); Sigley v. Parma Heights, 437 F.3d 527, 537 (6th Cir. 2006) (denying qualified immunity where issue was whether shots into fleeing car were fired as suspect was threatening to run over officer or when officer was running alongside the car); Tubar v. Clift, 453 F.Supp.2d 1252, 1257 (W.D. Wash. 2006) (denying qualified immunity where stolen car posed no threat to officer because it was driving past him, rather than at him, at the time the third and fatal shot was fired at the fleeing suspect, even if the officer acted reasonably when firing the first two shots).

In other cases involving a suspect fleeing in a car being shot by an officer, other Circuits, like the Sixth Circuit, have also found the use of deadly force unreasonable based upon the threat of harm posed at the time of the shooting. For example, in Estate of Starks v. Enyart, 5 F.3d 230, 234 (7th Cir. 1993), the key issue was whether or not the officer stepped in front of the plaintiff's vehicle as the plaintiff was attempting to flee, with the Seventh Circuit finding that the use of deadly force would only be permitted if the plaintiff accelerated toward the officer. Like in Cupp, supra, the Seventh Circuit's determination of the reasonableness of the use of deadly force focused on the threat posed at the time of the shooting and whether the officer's life was threatened at that time. The Seventh Circuit went on to note that "whether the [vehicle] presented a threat of serious physical harm has not been conclusively established" (Id., n. 1) and that "fleeing felons who have not resorted to violence are accorded less intrusive seizures." Id. This latter statement conflicts and therefore splits with the Eleventh Circuit's holding that "[e]ven if Deputy Slaton's decision to fire his weapon was not the best available means of preventing Long's escape and preventing potential harm to others, we conclude that Slaton's use of deadly force was not an unreasonable means of doing so." Thus, a non-violent fleeing felon in the Seventh Circuit is afforded less intrusive means of seizure, but in the Eleventh Circuit that same non-violent fleeing felon is allowed to be shot to death. These differing results should be reviewed and reconciled by the Supreme Court.

III. THIS CASE HAS SIGNIFICANT PUBLIC POLICY IMPLICATIONS FOR THE MENTALLY ILL.

This case presents questions of exceptional importance to the mentally ill and their families. The Eleventh Circuit's opinion now allows a law enforcement officer to shoot a mentally ill fleeing suspect because of the unpredictability of that mentally ill suspect's behavior, even if that suspect had not previously acted in a violent or threatening manner. See, Long, 508 F.3d at 581 (stressing Long's mental instability and unpredictable behavior). Therefore, the same mental illness that could explain conduct, or serve as a defense to a crime or a basis not to impose the death penalty, is now a justification for the use of deadly force in the Eleventh Circuit. Thus, while a state may not execute a mentally ill person,[2] law enforcement officers can now be judge, jury and executioner of the fleeing mentally ill.

Although the Eleventh Circuit emphasized that Bryan fled in a police vehicle, any passenger vehicle can be used as a dangerous weapon. See, e.g., Robinson v. Arrugueta, 415 F.3d 1252 (11th Cir. 2005) (finding that a Ford Escort was used as a dangerous weapon). And although the majority emphasized Slaton warned Bryan before his fatal shot, warnings must be given only "where feasible." Garner, 471 U.S. at 11-12, 105 S.Ct. at 1701-02. With those two considerations in mind, a reasonable officer may well conclude, based on Long, that he may employ lethal force against any suspect who appears mentally unstable and is fleeing in an automobile, regardless of whether that suspect poses an immediate risk of serious danger to others. The Supreme Court's Fourth Amendment jurisprudence forbids such a result. In ruling on the Fourth Amendment question, the Eleventh Circuit erred by adopting an effective per se rule that police may shoot at mentally ill suspects fleeing in vehicles, and inappropriately regarded Bryan's non-threatening mental condition as a factor in favor of using lethal force.

---

[2] See, e.g., Ford v. Wainright, 477 U.S. 399, 408, 106 S. Ct. 2595, 2601 (1986) (noting that no state allows execution of the insane).

CONCLUSION

This petition should be granted because the Eleventh Circuit's opinion in this case significantly departs from twenty-three years of Supreme Court precedent by considering the potential risk of harm posed by a fleeing suspect to determine the reasonableness of an officer's use of deadly force, rather than considering whether the suspect posed an imminent or immediate threat of harm as required by Garner and its progeny. Additionally, the Eleventh Circuit's opinion creates a split among some of the Circuits in the application of Garner and its progeny. First, the Eleventh Circuit's opinion splits with other Circuits by considering the potential and future threat of the fleeing suspect, rather than the threat posed by the suspect at the time of the use of deadly force. Second, the Eleventh Circuit's opinion is in direct conflict with the Sixth Circuit's determination that a fleeing suspect's mere operation of a stolen police cruiser in an attempt to flee is not sufficient justification for the use of deadly force, even if that fleeing suspect is in an altered state of mind.

Further, the Eleventh Circuit's holding that deadly force is reasonable even if not the best means available to seize a non-violent fleeing suspect splits with those circuits holding that non-violent fleeing suspects are to be afforded less intrusive means of seizure. Finally, the Eleventh Circuit's opinion has serious public policy implications for the mentally ill, as the opinion appears to create a bright line rule that an officer may shoot any mentally ill person attempting to flee in a vehicle, regardless of whether that mentally ill person had previously engaged in violent or threatening conduct.

For the foregoing reasons, Petitioners respectfully request that the decision of the Eleventh Circuit granting qualified immunity be summarily reversed, or alternatively, that writ of certiorari be granted.

Respectfully submitted,

MARC H. BARDACK
Counsel of Record
BOVIS, KYLE & BURCH, LLC
200 Ashford Center North
Suite 500
Atlanta, Georgia 30338-2668
(770) 391-9100
Attorneys for Petitioner

J. ALLEN BRINKLEY
BRINKLEY & CHESTNUT
307 Randolph Avenue
Post Office Box 2026
Huntsville, Alabama 35804-2026
(256) 533-4534
Attorneys for Petitioner

[PUBLISH]

IN THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE ELEVENTH CIRCUIT

No. 06-14439

D. C. Docket No. 06-01014-CV-3-IPJ

ROBERT R. LONG,
KELLY L. LONG,
as Personal Representatives of the Estate of Bryan L. Long, deceased,

Plaintiffs-Appellees,

versus

JIMMIE RAY SLATON, JR.,
RONNIE WILLIS,

Defendants-Appellants.

Appeal from the United States District Court
for the Northern District of Alabama

(November 16, 2007)

Before EDMONDSON, Chief Judge, HULL, Circuit Judge, and FORRESTER,* District Judge.

---

* Honorable J. Owen Forrester, United States District Judge for the Northern District of Georgia, sitting by designation.

EDMONDSON, Chief Judge:

This appeal involves deadly force, the Fourth Amendment, and qualified immunity. Jimmie Slaton ("Deputy Slaton" or "Slaton") and Ronnie Willis ("Sheriff Willis" or "Willis") (collectively, "Defendants") appeal the district court's denial of their motion to dismiss on qualified immunity grounds this section 1983 suit arising out of the death of Bryan Long ("Long"). Dr. Robert R. Long ("Long's father") and Kelly Long (collectively, "Plaintiffs"), representatives of Long's estate, filed suit against Defendants in their individual capacities. Plaintiffs' complaint alleges that Deputy Slaton shot and killed Long in violation of Long's "civil rights."[1] Because we conclude that Plaintiffs' complaint fails to state a claim for a violation of Long's Fourth Amendment rights and that the applicable law was not already clearly established at the pertinent time, we reverse the district court's order.

I. Background

The complaint alleges these facts. In May 2005, Long's father, a medical doctor, went to the Lauderdale County Probate Court seeking to have Long committed to a hospital because Long was suffering from a "psychotic episode." But Long's father was unable to have Long committed because of a lack of available hospital beds. While returning to his residence,[2] Long's father called the Lauderdale County Sheriff's Department and requested assistance due to Long's psychosis. Upon arrival at his home, Long's father waited in his vehicle for help to arrive.

[1] On appeal, Plaintiffs are arguing the Fourth Amendment.

Deputy Slaton responded to the call and arrived at the Long residence shortly thereafter. Slaton, who was alone, got out of his marked sheriff's cruiser,[3]

---

[2] The complaint states that the Long residence is located on the outskirts of Florence, Alabama, on an 18-acre lot. The nearest neighbor is about half a mile away. The property's 250-foot driveway connects to a county road.

[3] Plaintiff's complaint refers to Deputy Slaton's vehicle as a "cruiser." The word "cruiser" is defined as "a police-car that patrols the streets," from which we infer that Deputy Slaton's vehicle was a marked sheriff's patrol vehicle. See 4 Oxford English Dictionary 80 (2d ed. 1989) (1928). Although we rely on the ordinary meaning of the term "cruiser" as a marked police patrol vehicle, this fact (which no one has disputed) is directly supported by an investigative report from the Alabama Bureau of Investigation, which Plaintiffs submitted to the district court as an attachment to Plaintiffs' Brief in Opposition to Defendants' Motion to Dismiss. The report indicates that the vehicle was a marked sheriff's cruiser complete with county tags, a flashing light bar on the roof, two police radios, and other emergency equipment. At the 12(b)(6) stage, we "primarily consider the allegations in the complaint," but "[t]he court is not [always] limited to the four corners of the complaint." 5B Charles Alan Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1357 at 376-77 (3d ed. 2004). Because Plaintiffs submitted the investigative report in opposing Defendants' motion to dismiss and because the document's authenticity and veracity are in this case unchallenged, we look to the report to confirm that the ordinary meaning of "cruiser" applies as an undisputed fact for Deputy Slaton's sheriff's cruiser.

leaving the keys in the ignition and the driver's door open. Slaton then spoke to Long's father, who explained his desire that Long be detained due to Long's psychosis. When Deputy Slaton asked Long's father if Long had been physically violent with him, the father responded, "no."

Deputy Slaton then approached Long, who was at the end of the driveway, close to the house. Slaton pulled out handcuffs and told Long that Slaton would take Long to jail. Long voiced his disagreement and then ran over to and got inside Slaton's cruiser and closed the door. Slaton then ran to the driver's side of the cruiser, pointed his pistol at Long, and ordered Long to get out of the cruiser. Deputy Slaton threatened to shoot Long if Long did not comply. Long then shifted the cruiser into reverse and began backing away and down the driveway toward the road. Slaton stepped into the middle of the driveway and fired three shots at Long as the sheriff's cruiser moved away. One shot went through the windshield and struck Long in the chest. The cruiser stopped as it rolled into an embankment, and Long died after about a minute. At the time, backup law enforcement was en route.[4]

---

[4] The complaint also alleges that Deputy Slaton was under the influence of an illegal drug, as evidenced by these facts: (1) a marijuana cigarette was found in the sheriff's cruiser after the shooting; (2) Slaton was never tested for drugs after the shooting; and (3) Long's body tested negative for marijuana. This allegation, however, has no application in the objective Fourth

(Continued on following page)

II. Discussion

We review de novo a trial court's denial of a motion to dismiss a complaint on qualified immunity grounds.[5] Snider v. Jefferson State Cmty. Coll., 344 F.3d 1325, 1327 (11th Cir. 2003). In determining Amendment analysis of whether an objectively reasonable officer, facing the circumstances in this case could lawfully use deadly force. See Graham v. Connor, 109 S. Ct. 1865, 1872 (1989) ("[T]he question is whether the officers' actions are 'objectively reasonable' in light of the facts and circumstances confronting them, without regard to their underlying intent or motivation."). Plaintiffs argue that whether Deputy Slaton was under the influence of marijuana is relevant to the reasonableness of his overall acts. But the Fourth Amendment issue is whether an officer reasonably could have used deadly force when confronted with the situation at the scene, not whether a reasonable officer would have smoked marijuana before arriving. We judge the application of force to see if it was excessive, not the particular officer's qualities.

---

[5] The district court denied Defendants' motion to dismiss the day after briefing was completed on the motion and with no explanation, stating simply that the court was "of the opinion that the motion to dismiss is due to be denied." This kind of order is of no help to an appellate court. In addition, such a summary denial of qualified immunity does not clearly demonstrate that the district court had entirely taken to heart the Supreme Court's instruction to courts about the duty to treat seriously motions raising immunity and to grant qualified immunity at the earliest possible point in the litigation. See Anderson v. Creighton, 107 S. Ct. 3034, 3042 n.6 (1987) (rejecting the argument that qualified immunity cannot be granted before discovery and stating that "qualified immunity questions should be resolved at the earliest possible stage of a litigation"); Mitchell v. Forsyth, 105 S. Ct. 2806, 2815 (1985) (stating that the "entitlement" of qualified immunity is "immunity from suit rather than a mere defense to liability").

whether Plaintiffs' complaint alleges the violation of a clearly established right, we accept the allegations in the complaint as true and draw all reasonable inferences therefrom in favor of the Plaintiffs. Id. We first ask whether a constitutional violation occurred; we then ask whether the violation was already clearly established by the law at the time. Saucier v. Katz, 121 S. Ct. 2151, 2156 (2001).

A. Excessive Force and the Fourth Amendment

We first examine whether Deputy Slaton's use of deadly force was excessive and violated the Fourth Amendment. The standard for whether the use of force was excessive under the Fourth Amendment is one of "objective reasonableness." See Graham v. Connor, 109 S. Ct. 1865, 1867-68 (1989). "The 'reasonableness' of a particular use of force must be judged from the perspective of a reasonable officer on the scene, rather than with the 20/20 vision of hindsight." Id. at 1872.

In the context of deadly force, the Supreme Court has set out examples of factors that justify the use of such force:

> Where the officer has probable cause to believe that the suspect poses a threat of serious physical harm, either to the officer or to others, it is not constitutionally unreasonable to prevent escape by using deadly force. Thus, if the suspect threatens the officer with a weapon . . . deadly force may be used > if necessary to prevent escape, and if, where feasible, some warning has been given.

Tennessee v. Garner, 105 S. Ct. 1694, 1701 (1985). Garner says something about deadly force but not everything, especially when facts vastly different from Garner are presented. The Supreme Court has cautioned that "Garner did not establish a magical on/off switch that triggers rigid preconditions whenever an officer's actions constitute 'deadly force.'" Scott v. Harris, 127 S. Ct. 1769, 1777 (2007).

Because "[t]he test of reasonableness under the Fourth Amendment is not capable of precise definition or mechanical application," Graham, 109 S. Ct. at 1872 (quoting Bell v. Wolfish, 99 S.Ct. 1861 (1979)) (alteration in original), we must "slosh our way through the factbound morass of 'reasonableness.'" Scott, 127 S. Ct. at 1778. Therefore, determining whether "the use of a particular type of force in a particular situation" is "reasonable" in the constitutional sense[6] requires a court to "balance the nature

---

[6] The Fourth Amendment's "reasonableness" standard and the standard of "reasonable care" under tort law are not the same. An officer may fail to exercise "reasonable care" as a matter of state tort law yet still act reasonably in the federal constitutional sense. "The United States Constitution [and] traditional tort law . . . do not address the same concerns." Daniels v. Williams, 106 S. Ct. 662, 666 (1986) (concluding that "injuries inflicted by governmental negligence are not addressed by the United States Constitution") (Fourteenth Amendment case); see also Purcell ex rel. Estate of Morgan v. Toombs County, 400 F.3d 1313, 1324 (11th Cir. 2005) ("'Reasonable care' under and quality of the intrusion on the individual's Fourth Amendment interests against the importance of the governmental interests alleged to justify the intrusion." Scott, 127 S. Ct. at 1777, 1778 (quoting United States v. Place, 103 S. Ct. 2637, 2642 (1983)).

(Continued on following page)

In examining whether an officer's use of deadly force is reasonable, we recognize that "police officers are often forced to make split-second judgments – in circumstances that are tense, uncertain, and rapidly evolving – about the amount of force that is necessary in a particular situation." Graham, 109 S. Ct. at 1872. So "[w]e are loath to second-guess the decisions made by police officers in the field." Vaughan v. Cox, 343 F.3d 1323, 1331 (11th Cir. 2003).

Accepting the facts as alleged in the complaint as true, we conclude that Deputy Slaton's force was objectively reasonable under the Fourth Amendment. Although Slaton's decision to fire his weapon risked Long's death, that decision was not outside the range of reasonableness in the light of the potential danger posed to officers and to the public if Long was allowed to flee in a stolen police cruiser. "[U]nder the law, the threat of danger to be assessed is not just the threat to officers at the moment, but also to the officers and other persons if the chase went on." Pace v. Capobianco, 283 F.3d 1275, 1280 n.12 (11th Cir. 2002). "[T]he question then is whether, tort law is not the same thing as reasonable safety within the meaning of the federal Constitution.") (Eighth Amendment case).

---

given the circumstances, [Long] would have appeared to reasonable police officers to have been gravely dangerous." Id. at 1281. Considering the circumstances surrounding the shooting, including the threat posed by Long's condition and behavior, this question must be answered "yes."

We stress these facts: Long was mentally unstable; and he had taken control of not just any vehicle, but a police cruiser. This police cruiser was marked as a Lauderdale County Sheriff's patrol car and was equipped with a flashing light bar on the roof, two police radios, and other emergency equipment. Under Alabama law, a motor vehicle is, at least, potentially a "dangerous instrument" – that is, an instrument "highly capable of causing death or serious bodily injury." Ala. Code § 13A-1-2(5). Different from other vehicles, this fully marked and fully equipped police cruiser had an even greater potential for causing – either intentionally or otherwise – death or serious bodily injury.

Even if we accept that the threat posed by Long to Deputy Slaton was not immediate in that the cruiser was not moving toward Slaton when shots were fired,[7] the law does not require officers in a tense and dangerous situation to wait until the moment a suspect uses a deadly weapon to act to stop

---

[7] We note the obvious: Long could have quickly shifted gears and accelerated towards Deputy Slaton at any time. An objectively reasonable officer would have known this fact.

the suspect. See Pace, 283 F.3d at 1282 (concluding at the summary judgment stage that officers did not use excessive force in shooting a suspect who had stopped his vehicle after a high-speed chase – even though the court accepted that, at the time of the shooting, the suspect had neither tried to run over nor aimed the vehicle at officers); Blanford v. Sacramento County, 406 F.3d 1110, 1116-19 (9th Cir. 2005) (concluding that officers did not use excessive force in shooting a suspect who was carrying a sword, had failed to comply with orders to drop the sword, and was attempting to enter a house that – as far as the officers knew – might or might not have been empty, even though the suspect was at all times walking away from the officers and did not actually threaten the officers – or anyone else – with the weapon); cf. Montoute v. Carr, 114 F.3d 181, 185 (11th Cir. 1997) ("[A]n officer is not required to wait until an armed and dangerous felon has drawn a bead on the officer or others before using deadly force.").[8]

Although at the point of the shooting Long had not yet used the police cruiser as a deadly weapon, Long's unstable frame of mind, energetic evasion of [8] Montoute is a qualified immunity decision. The person shot by police (who were responding to a report of shots fired) was carrying a sawed-off shotgun, walking away from officers, and ignoring warnings to drop the weapon; the person had not pointed the weapon at anyone, and the police did not know he was a shooter. 114 F.3d at 183, 185.

---

the deputy's physical control, Long's criminal act[9] of stealing a police cruiser, and Long's starting to drive – even after being warned of deadly force – to a public road gave the deputy reason to believe that Long was dangerous. See Blanford, 406 F.3d at 1117-19 (concluding that third volley of shots hitting sword-carrying suspect – who "appear[ed] intent on accessing a [place] . . . where his sword could inflict injury that the deputies would not then be in a position to prevent" – was not excessive force because "the deputies knew that Blanford had committed a crime, albeit not a violent one, and was continuing a course of conduct that objectively indicated he was not giving up the sword that made him a threat to anyone in charging range").

Protecting the innocent public from risks that are not remote is a government interest. See Scott, 127 S. Ct. at 1778 (noting the importance of the relative culpability of a fleeing driver who had ignored officers' warnings to stop as compared to the innocent public). Even a quick check of only published appellate decisions shows the risk of serious harm to the public in the circumstances facing Deputy Slaton was not imaginary. In many cases, people have stolen

---

[9] Deputy Slaton had probable cause to believe that Long had committed at least two crimes under Alabama law, including at least one felony, by taking control of and attempting to flee in a stolen sheriff's cruiser: (1) unauthorized use of a vehicle, see Ala. Code § 13A-8-11(a)(1); and (2) theft of property in the first degree, see Ala. Code §§ 13A-8-2, 13A-8-3(b).

police vehicles and used them to engage in further criminal conduct or otherwise to harm innocent people. See, e.g., People v. Hyde, 166 Cal. App. 3d 463 (Cal. Ct. App. 1985) (man stole police vehicle, used it to stalk victim by impersonating police officer, and later pulled over, kidnaped, and murdered victim); Chapman v. City of Quitman, 954 So.2d 468 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007) (plaintiff sued city after member of angry mob snuck past officer, stole police cruiser, and used it to run down plaintiff who saw the cruiser approaching but thought it was driven by officers coming to his aid); Rios v. City of Del Rio, 444 F.3d 417 (5th Cir. 2006) (city police chief and officer were sued after escaped prisoner took possession of officer's patrol car and later crashed it into and severely injured customs enforcement officer assisting city police in chasing prisoner); Griffin v. State, 9 P.3d 301 (Alaska Ct. App. 2000) (man resisted arrest, stole police cruiser, put cruiser in reverse and rammed another cruiser injuring two officers inside, and attempted to run down other officers who shot and injured man, after which man smashed through officers' cruisers and led police on high-speed chase); Bryant v. County of Los Angeles, 26 Cal. App. 4th 919 (Cal. Ct. App. 1994) (county and sheriff's deputy were sued after man stole sheriff's patrol car, drove away, and caused accident that left another person a quadriplegic); Duarte v. City of San Jose, 100 Cal. App. 3d 648 (Cal Ct. App. 1980) (police officers and city were sued by homeowner who was hit by a stolen police car while he was mowing his lawn); Pile v. City of Brandenburg, 215 S.W.3d 36 (Ky. 2006) (city was sued after officer left inebriated man in back of police cruiser with engine running and emergency lights flashing, after which man took control of cruiser, sped away, and crashed into another vehicle, killing himself as well as woman in other vehicle); Thomas v. Gallant Ins. Co., 733 So.2d 1236 (La. Ct. App. 1999) (man took control of idling police vehicle, sped off to escape from officers, and then crashed head-on into another vehicle); State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Montagna, 874 A.2d 406 (Me. 2005) (man ran from sheriff's detective, stole detective's cruiser, and then drove cruiser at and hit detective); People v. Vasquez, 341 N.W.2d 873 (Mich. Ct. App. 1983) (man took police car, drove away from police at excessive speeds, disobeyed traffic signals, and crashed into and killed motorcyclist); Felty v. City of Lawton, 578 P.2d 757 (Okla. 1977) (city was sued after man stole police cruiser, crashed head-on with another vehicle, resulting in death of woman); Vaughn v. City of Tulsa, 974 P.2d 188 (Okla. Ct. App. 1998) (city was sued after man was arrested and placed in back of police cruiser, after which he took control of cruiser and crashed into and injured victims); Rowe v. City of Chattanooga, 666 S.W.2d 469 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1983) (city was sued after officer left police cruiser running in parking lot, and man stole cruiser, drove away, and crashed into and injured other people); Finnigan v. Blanco County, 670 S.W.2d 313 (Tex. Ct. App. 1984) (county was sued after man stole county sheriff's vehicle, which led to chase and crash that killed woman). Failing to stop a psychotic man from driving away in a marked sheriff's cruiser not only would have provided the man with a potentially (to say the least) lethal weapon, but also would have cloaked him with the apparent authority of a law enforcement officer.

The Supreme Court also has noted that providing a warning to a fleeing suspect weighs in favor of the reasonableness of using deadly force. See Garner, 105 S. Ct. at 1701 (noting the importance of a warning if feasible). Deputy Slaton gave clear warning of the intent to use deadly force before firing his weapon. Under the circumstances, we do not accept that Slaton's use of deadly force to stop Long from fleeing in the sheriff's cruiser was beyond the outside border of constitutionally reasonable conduct.

Plaintiffs argue that Long's death could have been avoided by using alternative means of apprehending Long such as shooting out the tires of the cruiser, using spike strips, or allowing Long to leave and then tracking the easily identifiable cruiser and arresting Long at a different location. We suppose that other means of stopping Long's escape existed that, if used, also might have prevented Long from harming others. But considering the unpredictability of Long's behavior and his fleeing in a marked police cruiser, "[w]e think the police need not have taken that chance and hoped for the best." See Scott, 127 S. Ct. at 1778 (responding to the argument that the police could have avoided the accident had they ceased their pursuit). The circumstances made the time to think short. Even if Deputy Slaton's decision to fire his weapon was not the best available means of preventing Long's escape and preventing potential harm to others, we conclude that Slaton's use of deadly force was not an unreasonable means of doing so.

For these reasons, Plaintiffs' complaint fails to state a claim for the violation of Long's Fourth Amendment rights.[10]

B. Qualified Immunity

Even if Slaton's use of deadly force was excessive under the Fourth Amendment, we conclude alternatively that Defendants are entitled to qualified immunity because they, especially given the circumstances, violated no clearly established right. "[T]he purpose of the qualified immunity doctrine is to give meaning to the proposition that '[g]overnment officials are not required to err on the side of caution' when it comes to avoiding constitutional violations."

---

[10] The complaint's only allegation about Sheriff Willis was that he "failed to institute a constitutionally compliant policy governing use of deadly force . . . and/or failed to properly and adequately train [Slaton] in regard to such a policy." Because Plaintiffs have failed to state a claim for the violation of a constitutional right, Plaintiffs' supervisory claims against Willis also fail. See City of Los Angeles v. Heller, 106 S. Ct. 1571, 1573 (1986) (concluding that whether police policies and regulations were proper is "beside the point" when "a person has suffered no constitutional injury at the hands of the individual police officer"); Blyden v. Mancusi, 186 F.3d 252, 265 (2d Cir. 1999) ("Of course, for a supervisor to be liable under Section 1983, there must have been an underlying constitutional deprivation.").

See Crosby v. Monroe, 394 F.3d 1328, 1334 (11th Cir. 2004) (quoting Marsh v. Butler County, 268 F.3d 1014, 1030 n.8 (11th Cir. 2001) (en banc)) (second alteration in original). For background, see Hunter v. Bryant, 112 S. Ct. 534, 537 (1991).

Qualified immunity protects "all but the plainly incompetent or those who knowingly violate the law." Malley v. Briggs, 106 S. Ct. 1092, 1096 (1986); accord Bashir v. Rockdale County, 445 F.3d 1323, 1327 (11th Cir. 2006). Defendants, in their individual capacities, are entitled to qualified immunity unless their "supposedly wrongful act was already established to such a high degree that every objectively reasonable official standing in the defendant's place would be on notice that what the defendant official was doing would be clearly unlawful given the circumstances." Pace, 283 F.3d at 1282.

Pointing to law pre-existing the events in the pertinent case, Plaintiffs have the burden of demonstrating that Defendants – at the pertinent time and given the specific circumstances of this case – had fair notice that their conduct would violate clear federal law. Vinyard v. Wilson, 311 F.3d 1340, 1350 (11th Cir. 2002). To demonstrate that the law at the time clearly established that Defendants' conduct would violate the Constitution, Plaintiffs might point to either (1) earlier case law from the Supreme Court, this Court, or the highest court of the pertinent state that is materially similar to the current case and therefore provided clear notice of the violation or (2) general rules of law from a federal constitutional or statutory provision or earlier case law that applied with "obvious clarity" to the circumstances, establishing clearly the unlawfulness of Defendants' conduct. See Marsh, 268 F.3d at 1031-33 & nn. 9-10; Willingham v. Loughnan, 321 F.3d 1299, 1301-03 (11th Cir. 2003); Vinyard, 311 F.3d at 1349-53. And "where the applicable legal standard is a highly general one, such as 'reasonableness,' preexisting case law that has applied general law to specific circumstances will almost always be necessary to draw a line that is capable of giving fair and clear notice that an official's conduct will violate federal law." Thomas v. Roberts, 323 F.3d 950, 954 (11th Cir. 2003).

Plaintiffs have failed to cite controlling and materially similar case law that would establish that Deputy Slaton's use of deadly force was clearly unlawful. Plaintiffs cite Vaughan, 343 F.3d 1323, as a materially similar case. But it is factually too different.

We do not read Vaughan as capable of putting every objectively reasonable officer on notice that deadly force could not be used in the circumstances presented in this case. In Vaughan, this Court concluded that an officer used unreasonable force when he, without warning, discharged his firearm at suspects fleeing in a stolen truck. See id. at 1330-32. The present case has, at least, three additional facts not present in Vaughan and that an objectively reasonable police officer could believe "might make a difference" for whether the conduct in the present instance would violate federal law. See generally Marsh, 268

F.3d at 1032 (discussing when pre-existing precedents cannot clearly establish the applicable law). In this case, unlike Vaughan, the fleeing driver was in an unstable frame of mind, had taken possession of a marked police cruiser, and had been warned that deadly force would be used if he did not leave the cruiser. Therefore, we believe that the situation in Vaughan is too different from this case to cause every objectively reasonable officer to know that the use of deadly force in the circumstances of this case must violate federal law.

Plaintiffs also attempt to rely on Garner, 105 S. Ct. 1694, as having clearly established broad principles that cover the contours of this case with obvious clarity. As the Supreme Court recently pointed out, however, "[w]hatever Garner said about the factors that might have justified shooting the suspect in that case, such 'preconditions' have scant applicability to this case, which has vastly different facts."[11] Scott, 127 S. Ct. at 1777.

> [W]hen we look at decisions such as Garner and Graham, we see some tests to guide us in determining the law in many different

---

[11] "Garner held that it was unreasonable to kill a 'young, slight, and unarmed' burglary suspect by shooting him 'in the back of the head' while he was running away on foot and when the officer 'could not reasonably have believed that [the suspect] . . . posed any threat,' and 'never attempted to justify his actions on any basis other than the need to prevent escape.'" Scott, 127 S. Ct. at 1777 (internal citation omitted) (alteration in original).

> kinds of circumstances; but we do not see the kind of clear law (clear answers) that would apply with such obvious clarity to the circumstances of this case that only an incompetent officer or one intending to violate the law could possibly fail to know that what the police did here violated federal law.

Pace, 283 F.3d at 1283 (shooting of a fleeing suspect in vehicle); accord Brosseau v. Haugen, 125 S. Ct. 596, 599 (2004) (same). Simply put, the Supreme Court's decision in Garner – which does not involve a fleeing motor vehicle – offered little insight on whether an officer, consistently with the Fourth Amendment, may use deadly force to stop a man who has stolen a police cruiser and has been given clear warnings about the use of deadly force. Garner does not apply to the circumstances of this case with obvious clarity.

Nor does this case present otherwise an obvious violation of Long's rights under the Fourth Amendment. We do not believe that every objectively reasonable officer in Deputy Slaton's position must have known that firing his weapon at the police cruiser under these circumstances would be an unconstitutional application of force. Results in these kinds of cases – involving reasonableness and balancing – are extremely fact dependent; at worst, Deputy Slaton's acts fell within the "hazy border between excessive and acceptable force.'" Saucier, 121 S. Ct. at 2158 (quoting Priester v. Riviera Beach, 208 F.3d 919, 926-27 (11th Cir. 2000)). Therefore, because preexisting law did not provide fair warning that shooting at Long in this situation would violate federal law, Defendants are entitled to qualified immunity.[12]

III. Conclusion

Accepting the allegations in Plaintiffs' complaint as true, we conclude that Plaintiffs have failed to state a claim for a violation of Long's Fourth Amendment rights. Deputy Slaton's use of deadly force was constitutionally reasonable under the circumstances. Even if Plaintiffs could establish that Slaton's use of deadly force was excessive under the Fourth Amendment, the applicable law was not already clearly established at the time of the shooting. Thus, the district court erred in denying Defendants' motion to dismiss.

REVERSED and REMANDED.

---

[12] Even if Slaton's use of deadly force was excessive under the Fourth Amendment, Sheriff Willis was also entitled to qualified immunity. We do not believe that a failure to implement and train officers on a deadly force policy that covers the circumstances of this case constitutes a deliberate indifference to Long's constitutional rights; nor do we believe that such a conclusion was clearly established at the time of the shooting.

FORRESTER, District Judge, concurring in part and dissenting in part:

I respectfully dissent from the opinion of the majority in the action against Deputy Slaton.

To the recitation of the facts by the majority, I would add that Deputy Slaton had dealt with the deceased before without any major problem and that the shooting occurred in a fairly rural area several miles from Florence, Alabama.

As I understand the law, the use of deadly force is reasonable only where there is a serious threat of imminent or immediate physical harm to the officer or others. See, e.g., Tennessee v. Garner, 471 U.S. 1, 11-12 (1985); Beshers v. Harrison, 495 F.3d 1260, 1266-67 (11th Cir. 2007); Robinson v. Arrugueta, 415 F.3d 1252, 1256-57 (11th Cir. 2005); Vaughan v. Cox, 343 F.3d 1323, 1330 (11th Cir. 2003); McCormick v. City of Fort Lauderdale, 333 F.3d 1234, 1246 (11th Cir. 2003). I can find no arguable probable cause for such a belief in this case. To be sure, with the deceased in possession of a patrol car, the outcome of these events is uncertain, but the possibility that a nonviolent fleeing felon will later pose a threat of physical harm to others is remote and highly speculative.

I do not believe that this officer is entitled to qualified immunity either. Vaughan provides notice that seizing a fleeing felon in a vehicle by shooting him is unreasonable. Although there are differences between that case and this, Vaughan is not "fairly distinguishable." See Vinyard v. Wilson, 311 F.3d 1340, 1351-53 (11th Cir. 2002). In Vaughan, the truck was northbound on I-85 between Newnan and Atlanta traveling at speeds exceeding eighty miles per hour. At one point it rammed a police vehicle which was attempting a rolling roadblock. These facts present circumstances more fraught with immediate threat than those in the instant case, and this court determined that a jury could find that the officers in Vaughan violated the suspect's Fourth Amendment rights and were not entitled to qualified immunity.[1]

---

[1] I concur in the majority opinion's determination that the plaintiffs have failed to state a claim against Sheriff Ronnie Willis.

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT
OF ALABAMA
NORTHWESTERN DIVISION

ROBERT R. LONG and KELLY L. LONG as Personal Representatives of the Estate of Bryant L. Long, deceased,	)
Plaintiffs,	)	CV 06-J-1014-NW
vs.	)
JIMMY RAY SLATON, JR., and RONNIE WILLIS,	)
Defendants.	)

ORDER

(Filed Jul. 11, 2006)

Pending before the court is defendants Lauderdale County Sheriff Ronnie Willis and Deputy Sheriff Jimmie Slaton, Jr.'s motion to dismiss (doc. 7), and the court having considered said motion, brief in support (doc. 8), and plaintiffs' brief in opposition (doc. 10), and the court being of the opinion that the motion to dismiss is due to be denied,[1]

It is therefore ORDERED that said motion is DENIED.

---

[1] Plaintiffs are not suing defendants in their official capacities. Pla. response at 9.

DONE and ORDERED this 11th day of July 2006.

/s/ Inge Prytz Johnson
INGE PRYTZ JOHNSON
U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE

IN THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE ELEVENTH CIRCUIT

No. 06-14439

D.C. Docket No. 06-01014-CV-3-IPJ

ROBERT R. LONG,
Kelly L. Long, as Personal
Representatives of the Estate of Bryan L. Long, deceased,

Plaintiffs-Appellees,

versus

JIMMIE RAY SLATON, JR.,
Ronnie Willis,

Defendants-Appellants.

Appeal from the United States District Court
for the Northern District of Alabama

ON PETITION FOR REHEARING EN BANC

(Filed May 27, 2008)

Before EDMONDSON, Chief Judge, TJOFLAT, ANDERSON, BIRCH, DUBINA, BLACK, CARNES, BARKETT, HULL, MARCUS, WILSON, and PRYOR, Circuit Judges.

ORDER:

The Court having been polled at the request of one of the members of the Court and majority of the Circuit Judges who are in regular active service not having voted in favor of it (Rule 35, Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure; Eleventh Circuit Rule 35-5), the Suggestion of Rehearing En Banc is DENIED.

/s/ J.L. Edmondson
CHIEF JUDGE

109

No. 08-251

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
OCT 27 2008
OFFICE OF THE CLERK

In The

Supreme Court of the United States

ROBERT R. LONG AND KELLY L. LONG,

Petitioners,

v.

JIMMIE RAY SLATON, JR. AND RONNIE WILLIS,

Respondents.

On Petition For Writ Of Certiorari To The United States Court Of Appeals For The Eleventh Circuit

BRIEF IN OPPOSITION

KENDRICK E. WEBB
Counsel of Record
C. RICHARD HILL, JR.
JOSEPH L. HUBBARD, JR.
WEBB & ELEY, P.C.
7475 Halcyon Pointe Drive
P. O. Box 240909
Montgomery, Alabama 36124
(334) 262-1850

Attorneys for Respondents

COCKLE LAW BRIEF PRINTING CO. (800) 225-6964
OR CALL COLLECT (402) 342-2831

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Page

TABLE OF CONTENTS i

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES ii

STATEMENT OF THE CASE 1

SUMMARY OF THE REASONS TO DENY THE PETITION 8

REASONS TO DENY THE PETITION 10

I. NO PRECEDENT CLEARLY ESTABLISHES THAT DEPUTY SLATON'S USE OF FORCE WAS UNCONSTITUTIONAL ... 10

A. Petitioners have created a false dichotomy between a risk of "potential danger" and a risk of "immediate danger" 10

B. Deputy Slaton's use of force was objectively reasonable under the fact-specific Fourth Amendment analysis required by this Court and the Eleventh Circuit 15

C. No clearly established law placed Deputy Slaton on notice that his use of force was unconstitutional 18

II. THE ELEVENTH CIRCUIT'S DECISION CREATES NO CIRCUIT SPLIT 24

III. THE ELEVENTH CIRCUIT'S DECISION DOES NOT VIOLATE PUBLIC POLICY 34

CONCLUSION 36

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Page

CASES

Abraham v. Raso, 183 F.3d 279 (3rd Cir.1999) 30, 31, 33

Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 127 S.Ct. 1955 (2007) 6, 12, 17

Blanford v. Sacramento County, 406 F.3d 1110 (9th Cir.2005) 14

Brousseau v. Haugen, 543 U.S. 194 (2004) ..... passim

City of Milwaukee v. Cement Div., Nat. Gypsum Co., 515 U.S. 189 (1995) 30

Concrete Works of Colorado, Inc. v. City and County of Denver, Colo., 124 S.Ct. 556 (2003) 30

Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41 (1957) 6

Dooley v. Korean Air Lines Co., Ltd., 524 U.S. 116 (1998) 30

Elder v. Holloway, 510 U.S. 510, 114 S.Ct. 1019 (1994) 7

Estate of Starks v. Enyart, 5 F.3d 230 (7th Cir.1993) 30, 31, 33

Financial Sec. Assur., Inc. v. Stephens, Inc., 500 F.3d 1276 (11th Cir.2007) 6

Graham v. Connor, 109 S.Ct. 1872 (1989) 17, 18, 19, 22, 23

H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., 492 U.S. 229 (1989) 30

Hope v. Pelzer, 536 U.S. 730 (2002) 22

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES – Continued

Page

Hunter v. Bryant, 502 U.S. 224 (1991).....7

Long v. Slaton, 508 F.3d 576 (11th Cir.2007).....passim

Lynch v. Baxley, 386 F.Supp. 378 (M.D.Ala. 1974).....3, 26

Magdziak v. Byrd, 1995 WL 704394 (N.D.Ill. 1995).....20

Mitchell v. Forsyth, 472 U.S. 528, 105 S.Ct. 2816 (1985).....7

Montoute v. Carr, 114 F.3d 181 (11th Cir.1997).....14, 15

Pace v. Capobianco, 283 F.3d 1275 (11th Cir.2002).....12, 13, 14, 20, 22

Scott v. Harris, 127 S.Ct. 1769 (2007).....passim

Sigley v. Parma Heights, 437 F.3d 527 (6th Cir.2006).....30, 31, 32, 33

Smith v. Cupp, 430 F.3d 766 (6th Cir.2005).....passim

Tennessee v. Garner, 471 U.S. 1, 105 S.Ct. 1694 (1985).....11, 15, 23, 28

Troupe v. Sarasota County, Fla., 419 F.3d 1160 (11th Cir.2005).....13

Tubar v. Clift, 453 F.Supp.2d 1252 (W.D.Wash. 2006).....30

Vaughan v. Cox, 343 F.3d 1323 (11th Cir.2003).....passim

Vimar Seguros y Reaseguros, S.A. v. M/V Sky Reefer, 515 U.S. 528 (1995).....30

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES – Continued

Page

STATUTES

42 U.S.C. §1983 1

ALA. CODE §13A-1-2(5).....15

ALA. CODE §22-52-10.4(a) 3, 26, 35

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

(i) Course of Proceedings Below

Petitioners filed their Complaint in this matter on May 25, 2006, pursuant to 42 U.S.C. §1983 seeking damages against Respondents Ronnie Willis and Jimmie Ray Slaton, Jr. Count One of the Complaint alleges that the actions of Deputy Slaton "violated the civil rights of the decedent Bryan Long guaranteed to him under the United States Constitution and Federal Statutes." Similarly, Count Two of the Complaint contends that the actions of Sheriff Willis "violated the civil rights of the decedent Bryan Long guaranteed to him under the United States Constitution and Federal Statutes."

In their Motion to Dismiss, the Respondents argued that the Petitioners' claims were due to be dismissed on qualified immunity grounds. Respondents fully discussed these grounds in their Memorandum Brief in Support of their Motion to Dismiss. On June 26, 2006, the District Court set a briefing schedule giving the Plaintiffs-Appellees fourteen (14) days in which to respond to Respondents' Motion to Dismiss and Memorandum Brief. On July 10, 2006, the Petitioners filed a Response in Opposition to the Motion to Dismiss. The following day, the District Court summarily denied the Respondents' Motion to Dismiss. The entire text of the Order provides:

> Pending before the court is defendants Lauderdale County Sheriff Ronnie Willis and Deputy Sheriff Jimmie Slaton, Jr.'s motion to > dismiss (doc. 7), and the court having considered said motion, brief in support (doc. 8), and the plaintiffs' brief in opposition (doc. 10), and the court being of the opinion that the motion to dismiss is due to be denied,

>
> It is therefore ORDERED that said motion is DENIED.

On August 10, 2006, the Respondents filed a timely Notice of Interlocutory Appeal. On November 16, 2007, the Eleventh Circuit reversed the District Court's denial of Respondents' Motion to Dismiss. Long v. Slaton, 508 F.3d 576 (11th Cir.2007). On May 27, 2008, Petitioners filed an Application for Rehearing En Banc, which the Eleventh Circuit denied, and on August 25, 2008, Petitioners filed this Petition for Writ of Certiorari.

(ii) Statement of Facts

Pursuant to the appropriate standard of review, all non-conclusory facts contained in the Complaint were assumed true by the Eleventh Circuit:

> The complaint alleges these facts. In May 2005, Long's father, a medical doctor, went to the Lauderdale County Probate Court seeking to have Long committed to a hospital because Long was suffering from a "psychotic episode."[1] But Long's father was unable to

---

[1] To be committed in the State of Alabama, one must be "mentally ill"; must "pose[ ] a real and present threat of substantial have Long committed because of a lack of available hospital beds. While returning to his residence,[2] Long's father called the Lauderdale County Sheriff's Department and requested assistance due to Long's psychosis.[3] Upon arrival at his home, Long's father waited in his vehicle for help to arrive.

(Continued on following page)

---

harm to himself or others"; and, "the danger posed by the person to be committed has been evidenced by a recent overt act." Lynch v. Baxley, 386 F.Supp. 378 (M.D.Ala. 1974). See also, ALA. CODE §22-52-10.4(a). Accordingly, the Petitioners concede that Bryan Long not only "pose[d] a real and present threat of harm to himself or others," but also concede that the danger he posed was "evidenced by a recent overt act." Id.

[2] Although the Petitioners devote a substantial portion of their statement of facts to the layout of their home, and argue that Bryan Long was "backing away from the officer in a vehicle on a gravel driveway in a rural, isolated area with one egress to a country road" (Pet. Brief, pp.3, 10-11), such rhetorical flourish was neither alleged in the Complaint, nor did the Eleventh Circuit find it relevant to the inquiry. As the Eleventh Circuit noted, "[t]he complaint states that the Long residence is located on the outskirts of Florence, Alabama, on an 18-acre lot. The nearest neighbor is about half a mile away. The property's 250-foot driveway connects to a county road." Long, 508 F.3d at 578 n.2. Of course, a half-mile is a very short distance to travel in a performance-enhanced police cruiser, which could travel from the outskirts of a city to a densely populated area in a very short time.

[3] Petitioners contend that Bryan Long was a "'fleeing, unarmed, previously non-violent, mentally ill suspect" (Pet. Brief, p.10), but this description of Long is contradicted by the allegations of the Complaint. Long was "unarmed" only if one discounts the fact that he was driving a thirty-five hundred pound, performance-enhanced police cruiser, and ignores the abundant statutory and case law authority describing vehicles

(Continued on following page)

Deputy Slaton responded to the call and arrived at the Long residence shortly thereafter. Slaton, who was alone, got out of his marked sheriff's cruiser,[4] leaving the keys as potential deadly weapons. Further, while Dr. Long may have told Slaton that his son had not been physically violent towards him that day, his description of his son's psychotic state (which by definition implies a real and present threat), Dr. Long's own behavior (remaining tucked safely away in his vehicle until Slaton arrived), and the extreme behavior exhibited by Bryan Long in Deputy Slaton's presence were contrary to the notion that his son posed no threat of harm.

---

[4] The Eleventh Circuit noted:

> Plaintiff's complaint refers to Deputy Slaton's vehicle as a "cruiser." The word "cruiser" is defined as "a police-car that patrols the streets," from which we infer that Deputy Slaton's vehicle was a marked sheriff's patrol vehicle. See 4 Oxford English Dictionary 80 (2d ed.1989) (1928). Although we rely on the ordinary meaning of the term "cruiser" as a marked police patrol vehicle, this fact (which no one has disputed) is directly supported by an investigative report from the Alabama Bureau of Investigation, which Plaintiffs submitted to the district court as an attachment to Plaintiffs' Brief in Opposition to Defendants' Motion to Dismiss. The report indicates that the vehicle was a marked sheriff's cruiser complete with county tags, a flashing light bar on the roof, two police radios, and other emergency equipment. At the 12(b)(6) stage, we "primarily consider the allegations in the complaint," but "[t]he court is not [always] limited to the four corners of the complaint." 5B Charles Alan Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure §1357 at 376-77 (3d ed.2004). Because Plaintiffs submitted the investigative report in opposing Defendants' motion to dismiss and because the document's authenticity and veracity are in this case unchallenged, we look in the ignition and the driver's door open. Slaton then spoke to Long's father, who explained his desire that Long be detained due to Long's psychosis. When Deputy Slaton asked Long's father if Long had been physically violent with him, the father responded, "no."

(Continued on following page)

Deputy Slaton then approached Long, who was at the end of the driveway, close to the house. Slaton pulled out handcuffs and told Long that Slaton would take Long to jail. Long voiced his disagreement and then ran over to and got inside Slaton's cruiser and closed the door. Slaton then ran to the driver's side of the cruiser, pointed his pistol at Long, and ordered Long to get out of the cruiser. Deputy Slaton threatened to shoot Long if Long did not comply. Long then shifted the cruiser into reverse and began backing away and down the driveway toward the road. Slaton stepped into the middle of the driveway and fired three shots at Long as the sheriff's cruiser moved away. One shot went through the windshield and struck Long in the chest. The cruiser stopped as it rolled into an embankment, and Long died after about a minute. At the time, backup law enforcement was en route.

Long, 508 F.3d at 578-79 (footnotes omitted).

---

to the report to confirm that the ordinary meaning of "cruiser" applies as an undisputed fact for Deputy Slaton's sheriff's cruiser.

Long, 508 F.3d at 578 n.3.

(iii) Standard of Review

This Court has recently confirmed that the pleading standard for purposes of a motion to dismiss requires factual allegations that support a plausible claim, rather than bald legal conclusions.[5] Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 127 S.Ct. 1955, 1965 (2007) ("Factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level.... So, when the allegations in a complaint, however true, could not raise a claim of entitlement to relief, "'this basic deficiency should...be exposed at the point of minimum expenditure of time and money by the parties and the court'") (internal citations omitted) (emphasis added). The Eleventh Circuit has adopted Bell Atlantic as the standard by which motions to dismiss are to be analyzed. Financial Sec. Assur., Inc. v. Stephens, Inc., 500 F.3d 1276, 1282 (11th Cir.2007) ("In order for the plaintiff to satisfy his 'obligation to provide the grounds of his entitlement to relief,' he must allege more than 'labels and conclusions'; his complaint must include '[f]actual allegations [adequate] to raise a right to relief above the speculative level.'") [ ] Stated differently, the factual allegations in a complaint must 'possess enough heft' to set forth 'a plausible entitlement to relief' ") (emphasis added).

---

[5] In Bell Atlantic, this Court abrogated the "beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief" standard of review established in Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46 (1957).

Additionally, this Court reviews the district court's denial of qualified immunity de novo, applying the same legal standards which should have been applied by the district court. The United States Supreme Court set out this Court's standard of review in Mitchell v. Forsyth:

> An appellate court reviewing denial of the defendant's claim of immunity need not consider the correctness of the plaintiff's version of the facts, nor even determine whether the plaintiff's actions actually state a claim. All it need determine is a question of law: whether the legal norms allegedly violated by the defendant were clearly established at the time of the challenged conditions or, in cases where the district court has denied summary judgment for the defendant on the ground that even under the defendant's version of the facts, the defendant's conduct violated clearly established law, whether the law clearly proscribed the actions the defendant claims he took.

472 U.S. at 528 (1985). "Appellate review of qualified immunity dispositions is to be conducted in light of all relevant precedents, not simply those cited to or discovered by the district court." Elder v. Holloway, 510 U.S. 510, 516, 114 S.Ct. 1019, 1023 (1994). See also, Hunter v. Bryant, 502 U.S. 224, 227 (1991) (per curiam) (granting qualified immunity at motion to dismiss stage, and observing, "we repeatedly have stressed the importance of resolving immunity questions at the earliest possible stage in litigation").

SUMMARY OF THE REASONS TO DENY THE PETITION

The Petitioners' request that this Court issue a Writ of Certiorari to the Eleventh Circuit is due to be denied. First, the Petition is premised on a distinction between the use of deadly force to prevent the risk of "potential danger" to the officer or others and the use of deadly force to prevent the risk of "immediate danger." This distinction is based solely in semantics and creates a false dichotomy. Any risk of danger, immediate or otherwise, is a potential danger, in that it has not yet occurred. Further, this distinction presumes that a "potential danger" is mutually exclusive of an "immediate danger." Of course, this reasoning is not sound; one can easily imagine a risk of "potential danger" that is, nevertheless, immediate.

The Petitioners, additionally, contend that the Eleventh Circuit's conclusion that Deputy Slaton's use of force was objectively reasonable in light of the circumstances he confronted is contrary to this Court's clearly established law. Ironically, the Eleventh Circuit relied on the very cases the Petitioners contend conflict with its holding. Alternatively, the Petitioners assert that the Eleventh Circuit's decision conflicts with its own clearly established law. These arguments, however, ignore this Court's admonition in Brousseau v. Haugen that Fourth Amendment excessive force jurisprudence is an "area [of law] in which the result depends very much on the facts of each case." 543 U.S. 194, 201 (2004) (per curiam). Because the cases cited by Petitioners are governed by the factual circumstances confronted by the officer, as are all Fourth Amendment excessive force cases, none of these cases conflicts with the Eleventh Circuit's holding, here.

Similarly, the so-called Circuit split that the Petitioners advance to justify this Court's review is a red herring. The cases cited by the Petitioners from the Third, Sixth, and Seventh Circuits are readily distinguishable on the factual circumstances faced by the officers, if not on the very basis of their holdings. Additionally, none of these cases addresses the distinction between "potential danger" and "immediate danger" that is the crux of the Petitioners' arguments. These cases merely present divergent results based on the application of the same law to vastly different facts, which cannot, alone, create a Circuit split.

Obviously the death of the Petitioners' son was a tragedy for everyone involved, especially the Longs. But it was a tragedy necessitated by the extreme behavior exhibited by Bryan Long, not by any misconduct on the part of Deputy Slaton. Unfortunately, Deputy Slaton was confronted by what was a remarkably unique scenario that day in May of 2005: a young man experiencing a "psychotic episode" and who, according to his father, a doctor, "pose[d] a real and present threat of harm to [him]self and/or others" as "evidenced by a recent overt act," not only refused to be taken into custody, but chose to commandeer an arresting officer's fully equipped, performance-enhanced police cruiser and began to drive away, ignoring direct order to get out of the cruiser under threat of being shot. Although reasonable officers could disagree as to the preferred response under these circumstances, no reasonable officer could deny that Long's actions created a dangerous situation that had to be addressed in a split-second and under tremendous pressure. Consequently, this case presents exactly the kind of scenario where responding officers are afforded the benefit of doubt under Fourth Amendment use-of-force jurisprudence, and the Eleventh Circuit properly granted Deputy Slaton qualified immunity.

REASONS TO DENY THE PETITION

I. NO PRECEDENT CLEARLY ESTABLISHES THAT DEPUTY SLATON'S USE OF FORCE WAS UNCONSTITUTIONAL.

A. Petitioners have created a false dichotomy between a risk of "potential danger" and a risk of "immediate danger."

Petitioners have misconstrued the state of the law regarding an officer's use of force to prevent a fleeing suspect from escaping when that suspect presents a risk of harm to the officer or others. Petitioners focus on the semantic difference between the risk of "potential danger" and the risk of "immediate danger." Of course, any risk of danger is "potential," in that it has not yet occurred. However, the Petitioners contend that, because the Eleventh Circuit recognized that Bryan Long posed a risk of "'potential danger'...as a mentally-unstable suspect in control of a police vehicle," the Court did not find that Bryan Long posed any risk of "immediate danger." (Pet. Brief, p.8.) Accordingly, Petitioners argue, the Eleventh Circuit's decision conflicts with precedent of this Court and the Eleventh Circuit, particularly, Scott v. Harris, 127 S.Ct. 1769 (2007), and Tennessee v. Garner, 471 U.S. 1, 105 S.Ct. 1694 (1985). However, no precedent from this Court, or from the Eleventh Circuit, suggests that Deputy Long should have waited until the risk of potential danger posed by a mentally-unstable suspect in control of a police vehicle was more immediate.

Neither Scott nor Garner requires that the risk of potential danger to an officer or others be somehow more "immediate" than the risk posed by a psychotic suspect in control of a performance-enhanced police cruiser.[6] In fact, the Petitioners' cursory treatment of Scott overlooks its ultimate holding. (Pet. Brief, p.7, discussing Scott in a parenthetical.) In Scott, this Court reversed the Eleventh Circuit's denial of qualified immunity to an officer who used deadly force to prevent the escape of a fleeing suspect. 127 S.Ct. 1769. There, this Court recognized as the seminal issue to the Fourth Amendment inquiry, the "risk of bodily harm that Scott's actions posed to respondent in light of the threat to the public that Scott was trying to eliminate." Id. at 1778 (emphasis added). In balancing these risks, this Court "t[ook] into account not only the number of lives at risk, but also their relative culpability," and concluded that "[i]t was respondent, after all, who intentionally placed himself and the public in danger by unlawfully engaging in the reckless, high-speed flight that ultimately produced the choice between two evils that Scott confronted." Id. Bryan Long's actions, likewise, forced Deputy Slaton to choose between two evils: allowing a suspect suffering from a "psychotic episode," and who posed a real and present threat of serious harm to himself or others, to escape in a stolen, performance-enhanced police cruiser with little regard for his own safety, much less the safety of others, or use deadly force to prevent the risk of harm to innocent and unknowing pedestrians and drivers a short distance away or even himself. As in Scott, the reasonableness of Deputy Slaton's actions is clear.

---

[6] This Court is well aware, from the video in Scott, of the capacity that a police cruiser has for traveling substantial distances in short periods of time at high rates of speed and performing dangerous maneuvers. See Scott, at 1773.

No precedent from this Court or the Eleventh Circuit supports the Petitioners' distinction between the risk of "potential danger" and the risk of "immediate danger," nor does any precedent suggest that "potential danger" is mutually exclusive of "immediate danger." Rather, as the Eleventh Circuit recognized in Pace v. Capobianco, "under the law, the threat of danger to be assessed is not just the threat to officers at the moment, but also to the officers and other persons if the chase went on." Pace v. Capobianco, 283 F.3d 1275, 1280 n.12 (11th Cir.2002) (emphasis added). In Pace, the Eleventh Circuit was faced with the same distinction that Petitioners now assert. There, the Eleventh Circuit accepted as true the allegations that, at the time of the shooting, the suspect had neither tried to run over nor aimed the vehicle at officers. Id. at 1282. Ultimately, the Court concluded that officers did not use excessive force in shooting a suspect who had stopped his vehicle after a high-speed chase. Id.

Likewise, in Troupe v. Sarasota County, Fla., 419 F.3d 1160 (11th Cir.2005), the Eleventh Circuit confirmed that no distinction exists between the risk of "potential danger" and the risk of "immediate danger." There, the suspect was in an Oldsmobile parked in a driveway when officers arrived in a SWAT vehicle and blocked the suspect's access to the main road. Id. at 1164. When the suspect revved the engine and moved the car forward, an officer shot him. The Eleventh Circuit recognized that the officer's use of force was reasonable because the officer "knew that citizens could be on the main street and could be harmed. Thus, Bauer believed there was an immediate risk of harm to the general public." Troupe, at 1169 n.8 (emphasis added). In holding that the officer's use of force was reasonable, the Court recognized that, when someone other than the officer "could be harmed" at an unknown time in the future should the suspect escape, the risk of harm is not a potential risk of harm; it is "an immediate risk of harm."

In the present case, the Eleventh Circuit reiterated this conclusion, holding that "the law does not require officers in a tense and dangerous situation to wait until the moment a suspect uses a deadly weapon to act to stop the suspect." Long, at 581 (citing Pace, 283 F.3d at 1282 (concluding at the summary judgment stage that officers did not use excessive force in shooting a suspect who had stopped his vehicle after a high-speed chase – even though the court accepted that, at the time of the shooting, the suspect had neither tried to run over nor aimed the vehicle at officers); Blanford v. Sacramento County, 406 F.3d 1110, 1116-19 (9th Cir.2005) (concluding that officers did not use excessive force in shooting a suspect who was carrying a sword, had failed to comply with orders to drop the sword, and was attempting to enter a house that – as far as the officers knew – might or might not have been empty, even though the suspect was at all times walking away from the officers and did not actually threaten the officers – or anyone else – with the weapon); Montoute v. Carr, 114 F.3d 181, 185 (11th Cir.1997) ("[A]n officer is not required to wait until an armed and dangerous felon has drawn a bead on the officer or others before using deadly force"). Although the Petitioners attempt to distinguish these cases, they do so by mischaracterizing their facts.[7]

---

[7] The Petitioners state that, in Pace, the suspect "turned his car toward pursuing officers." (Pet. Brief, p.9.) In Pace, the Court reached its conclusion "accept[ing]...as true that Davis's car, in the cul-de-sac, did not try to run over the deputies and that Davis, in the cul-de-sac, did not aim the car at the deputies." Pace, at 1282. Likewise, the Petitioners state that, in Montoute,

(Continued on following page)

B. Deputy Slaton's use of force was objectively reasonable under the fact-specific Fourth Amendment analysis required by this Court and the Eleventh Circuit.

In its opinion below, the Eleventh Circuit emphasized the following facts:

> Long was mentally unstable; and he had taken control of not just any vehicle, but a police cruiser. This police cruiser was marked as a Lauderdale County Sheriff's patrol car and was equipped with a flashing light bar on the roof, two police radios, and other emergency equipment. Under Alabama law, a motor vehicle is, at least, potentially a "dangerous instrument" – that is, an instrument "highly capable of causing death or serious bodily injury." ALA. CODE §13A-1-2(5). Different from other vehicles, this fully marked and fully equipped police cruiser had an even greater potential for causing – either intentionally or otherwise – death or serious bodily injury.

Long, at 581 (emphasis in original). Neither Garner nor Scott held unconstitutional the use of force to prevent a risk of danger such as the one Deputy Slaton the suspect was "carrying [a] sawed-off shotgun...which he had already fired." (Pet. Brief, p.9.) In Montoute, the Court observed that "Montoute had never turned around to face Carr and had never pointed the shotgun at anyone," and that the officer did not know that the suspect actually shot the gun. Montoute, at 183.

---

encountered.[8] As the Eleventh Circuit recognized, a Fourth Amendment reasonableness inquiry is inherently fact specific. "Garner says something about deadly force but not everything, especially when facts vastly different from Garner are presented. The Supreme Court has cautioned that 'Garner did not establish a magical on/off switch that triggers rigid preconditions whenever an officer's actions constitute "deadly force."'" Long, 508 F.3d at 580 (quoting Scott, 127 S.Ct. at 1777).

In Brousseau, a case much more factually similar to the circumstances faced by Deputy Slaton than Garner,[9] this Court explicitly acknowledged that, > this area is one in which the result depends very much on the facts of each case. None of them squarely governs the case here; they do suggest that Brousseau's actions fell in the 'hazy border between excessive and acceptable force.' The cases by no means clearly establish that Brousseau's conduct violated the Fourth Amendment.

---

[8] Garner dealt with the use of force on a "'young, slight, and unarmed' burglary suspect...[who] was running away on foot" and Scott involved the use of force on a fleeing suspect in a vehicle but it found that the use of force was reasonable. Scott, at 1777, 1778-79. Notably, the vehicle in Scott was not a fully equipped, performance-enhanced police cruiser but was a civilian vehicle. Id. at 1773.

[9] It is telling that the Petitioners fail to even cite, much less discuss, the most factually similar case on point that this Court has decided: Brousseau.

Brousseau, 543 U.S. at 200 (internal quotations and citations omitted). In other words, cases like Brousseau and the case at bar are, by their very nature, fact-dependent and difficult to arrange into neat principles of expected conduct.

Instead of applying a broad constitutional rule regarding the reasonableness of an officer's use of force, as the Petitioners now urge this Court to do, the Eleventh Circuit recognized the inherent factual specificity of the Fourth Amendment inquiry:

> Because "[t]he test of reasonableness under the Fourth Amendment is not capable of precise definition or mechanical application," Graham [v. Conner], 109 S.Ct. [1865] at 1872 [(1989)] (quoting Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 99 S.Ct. 1861, 60 L.Ed.2d 447 (1979)) (alteration in original), we must "slosh our way through the factbound morass of 'reasonableness.'" Scott, 127 S.Ct. at 1778.

Id. Petitioners now urge this Court to second-guess the decisions made by law enforcement officers in the field as to the immediacy of the risk of a potential danger, in direct contravention of the holding in Brousseau. To do so would undermine this Court's prior observation that "police officers are often forced to make split-second judgments – in circumstances that are tense, uncertain, and rapidly evolving – about the amount of force that is necessary in a particular situation." Graham v. Connor, 109 S.Ct. 1872 (1989); see also, Vaughan v. Cox, 343 F.3d 1323, 1331 (11th Cir.2003) ("We are loath to second-guess the decisions made by police officers in the field.").

C. No clearly established law placed Deputy Slaton on notice that his use of force was unconstitutional.

The Petitioners cite the Eleventh Circuit's opinion in Vaughan as one that provides Deputy Slaton "fair notice" that his conduct was unconstitutional. (Pet. Brief, p.10.) In Vaughan, the Eleventh Circuit considered the constitutionality of an officer's use of deadly force to prevent escape in their truck, a civilian vehicle, on an uncongested interstate. The Court based its conclusion that the suspects did not present a risk of danger to the officers or others on the following facts:

> Based on Vaughan's version of the events, it is not clear that Cox had probable cause to believe that Looney or Cox were in immediate danger from the suspects at the time of the shooting. Nor does the record reflect that the suspects had menaced or were likely to menace others on the highway at the time of the shooting. Instead, the truck's lane was clear of traffic and Rayson made no aggressive moves to change lanes before Cox fired. Moreover, according to Vaughan, the collision between the truck and Cox's cruiser was both accidental and insufficient to cause Cox to lose control.

343 F.3d at 1330.

Vaughan does not stand for the proposition, as the Petitioners suggest, that, before an officer may use force to prevent a suspect from fleeing in a vehicle, the suspect must "first drive[ ] such a vehicle in a manner which pose[s] an imminent threat of serious harm to the officers or others." (Pet. Brief, p.10.) Rather, the Court examined the "totality of the circumstances" to conclude that, under those circumstances, where the officer "simply faced two suspects who were evading arrest and who had accelerated to eighty to eighty-five miles per hour in a seventy-miles-per-hour zone in an attempt to avoid capture," the officer's use of deadly force was unconstitutional. Such a holding does not set a litmus test for the use of deadly force on a fleeing suspect. Rather, it reaffirms this Court's long-standing rule that, for purposes of a Fourth Amendment objective reasonableness inquiry, "the question is whether the officers' actions are 'objectively reasonable' in light of the facts and circumstances confronting them" and must be judged from the perspective of a reasonable officer on the scene, rather than with the 20/20 vision of hindsight." Graham at 386, 397.

Indeed, the Eleventh Circuit applied that test to the circumstances that Deputy Slaton faced: "'[T]he question then is whether, given the circumstances, [Long] would have appeared to reasonable police officers to have been gravely dangerous.' Considering the circumstances surrounding the shooting, including the threat posed by Long's condition and behavior, this question must be answered 'yes.'" Long, at 581

(quoting Pace, 283 F.3d at 1281). The Eleventh Circuit's conclusion, necessarily, was based on the factual distinctions between the circumstances faced by Deputy Slaton and the circumstances faced by the officer in Vaughan. The officer in Vaughan was not confronted by a suspect that had been diagnosed as psychotic, who evidenced a real and present threat of substantial harm to himself or others through recent and overt acts, nor did he confront a suspect that was operating a stolen, fully equipped, and performance-enhanced police cruiser. Additionally, the pursuit of the suspect in Vaughan on a four- to eight-lane, uncongested interstate with a right-of-way in excess of 100 feet, limited entrances and exits and no red lights or stop signs is less threatening to the public than chasing the same suspect on a two-lane roadway through a densely populated area filled with residences, schools and businesses and which would have been punctuated frequently by stop signs, red lights and numerous unregulated entrances and exits. See Magdziak v. Byrd, 1995 WL 704394 (N.D.Ill. 1995) (discussing the comparative risks posed by pursuits carried out in expressways versus residential roadways).

The Eleventh Circuit, focusing on these factual dissimilarities, distinguished its holding in Vaughan from the factual circumstances Deputy Slaton confronted:

> We do not read Vaughan as capable of putting every objectively reasonable officer on notice that deadly force could not be used in > the circumstances presented in this case. In Vaughan, this Court concluded that an officer used unreasonable force when he, without warning, discharged his firearm at suspects fleeing in a stolen truck.... The present case has, at least, three additional facts not present in Vaughan and that an objectively reasonable police officer could believe "might make a difference" for whether the conduct in the present instance would violate federal law. See generally Marsh [v. Butler County], 268 F.3d [1014] at 1032 [(11th Cir.2001)] (discussing when pre-existing precedents cannot clearly establish the applicable law). In this case, unlike Vaughan, the fleeing driver was in an unstable frame of mind, had taken possession of a marked police cruiser, and had been warned that deadly force would be used if he did not leave the cruiser. Therefore, we believe that the situation in Vaughan is too different from this case to cause every objectively reasonable officer to know that the use of deadly force in the circumstances of this case must violate federal law.

Long, at 584-85 (emphasis added). Because Vaughan could not have provided Deputy Slaton with "fair notice" that his conduct was unconstitutional, Deputy Slaton violated no clearly established law with his use of force.

Alternatively, the Petitioners contend that Vaughan provided Deputy Slaton "fair warning" that his use of force was unlawful under some "general constitutional rule," despite the fact that "the very action in question has [not] previously been held unlawful." (Pet. Brief, p.10, quoting Hope v. Pelzer, 536 U.S. 730, 741 (2002)). However, in Brousseau, this Court rejected a similar argument. There, the Court of Appeals acknowledged that "Graham v. Connor, supra, clearly establishes the general proposition that use of force is contrary to the Fourth Amendment if it is excessive under objective standards of reasonableness." 543 U.S. at 198. In Brousseau, this Court reversed the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals on the grounds that it > proceeded to find fair warning in the general tests set out in Graham and Garner. 339 F.3d, at 873-874. In so doing, it was mistaken. Graham and Garner, following the lead of the Fourth Amendment's text, are cast at a high level of generality. See Graham v. Connor, supra, at 396 [ ] ("'[T]he test of reasonableness under the Fourth Amendment is not capable of precise definition or mechanical application'"). Of course, in an obvious case, these standards can "clearly establish" the answer, even without a body of relevant case law. See Hope v. Pelzer, 536 U.S. 730, 738, [ ] (2002) (noting in a case where the Eighth Amendment violation was "obvious" that there need not be a materially similar case for the right to be clearly established). See also Pace v. Capobianco, 283 F.3d 1275, 1283 (11th Cir.2002) (explaining in a Fourth Amendment case involving an officer shooting a fleeing suspect in a vehicle that,

> "when we look at decisions such as Garner and Graham, we see some tests to guide us in determining the law in many different kinds of circumstances; but we do not see the kind of clear law (clear answers) that would apply" to the situation at hand). The present case is far from the obvious one where Graham and Garner alone offer a basis for decision.

Id. at 599.

The Petitioners advance the same argument that this Court rejected in Brousseau: that the "general constitutional rule" in Graham and Garner provided Deputy Slaton with fair notice that his use of force was unconstitutional. In Brousseau, the Court examined "whether, at the time of Brosseau's actions, it was '"'clearly established'"' in this more '"particularized"' sense that [the officer] was violating Haugen's Fourth Amendment right[s]." Id. at 199. After examining the cases that could have put the officer on notice that her use of force was unconstitutional, this Court concluded that all the "cases taken together undoubtedly show that this area is one in which the result depends very much on the facts of each case. None of them squarely governs the case here; they do suggest that Brosseau's actions fell in the '"hazy border between excessive and acceptable force."'" Id. at 201 (quoting Saucier v. Katz, 533 U.S. 194, 206 (2001)). As with Brousseau, the circumstances of this case render it "far from the obvious one where Graham and Garner alone offer a basis for decision." Id. Further, the Petitioners have cited no clearly established law that would transform this case from one that straddles the "hazy border between excessive and acceptable force" to an "obvious clarity" case. Id.

II. THE ELEVENTH CIRCUIT'S DECISION CREATES NO CIRCUIT SPLIT.

The Petitioners contend that the Eleventh Circuit's decision creates a split among the Circuits in Fourth Amendment jurisprudence. The Petitioners argue that the Eleventh Circuit decision "conflicts with the law in other Circuits, which determine[s] reasonableness based upon the threat to the officer or others at the time of the shooting." (Pet. Brief, p.11.) In support of this argument, the Petitioners cite cases from the Third Circuit, the Sixth Circuit, and the Seventh Circuit. None of the cited cases squarely addresses the distinction between the risk of "potential danger" and the risk of "immediate danger" for purposes of a Fourth Amendment objective reasonableness inquiry. Even if this Court recognizes such a distinction and disagrees with the Eleventh Circuit's holding in light of that distinction, the Eleventh Circuit's decision does not conflict with any decisions of these or any other Circuits.

The primary case the Petitioners rely on to show conflict between the Eleventh Circuit's decision and other Circuits is Smith v. Cupp, 430 F.3d 766 (6th Cir.2005). There, the Sixth Circuit held unconstitutional an officer's use of lethal force to stop a fleeing suspect who had stolen his police cruiser. The facts relied upon by the Sixth Circuit were that "Dunn shot Smith after the police cruiser was past Dunn and there was no immediate danger to anyone in the vicinity. Dunn's use of force was made even more unreasonable by the fact that Smith had been cooperative up to this point, and was arrested for the nonviolent offense of making harassing phone calls." Id. at 773. Although the Court recognized that "there was some danger to the public from Smith's driving off in a stolen police car," it ultimately held that the "absence of any Garner preconditions to the use of deadly force makes this an 'obvious' case" was sufficient to deny the officer qualified immunity. Id. at 773, 776. In reaching this conclusion, the Sixth Circuit relied heavily on the factual circumstances that the officer confronted in determining that "[a]lthough Smith had possession of a dangerous 'weapon,' he was not threatening the lives of those around him with it when he was fatally shot." Id. at 775.

Despite the fact that the suspect in Smith stole a police cruiser, the similarities between the circumstances faced by the officer in Smith and those faced by Deputy Slaton are negligible. The Sixth Circuit's finding of a constitutional violation had little to do with the fact that the suspect stole a police cruiser but focused, instead, on what an objectively reasonable officer would have thought the suspect would do with the stolen cruiser. The Sixth Circuit observed that "Smith and Dunn never struggled, Smith never displayed any violent tendencies, and the[se] facts support a finding that a reasonable officer in Dunn's position would not have perceived danger to anyone at the scene." Smith at 766. Instead of perceiving a threat of danger, a reasonable officer, under these circumstances, would have perceived "a scene where Smith was merely trying to flee in the cruiser and Dunn purposefully shot Smith under circumstances of no threat to Dunn or others." Id. at 770. These facts do not suggest that the suspect would, intentionally or otherwise, cause death or serious bodily injury to the officer or others.

However, these same facts that suggest the suspect in Smith presented no risk of danger to the officer or others are readily distinguishable from the circumstances Deputy Slaton faced. Bryan Long was in the midst of a "psychotic episode," and his condition, his father, a physician, believed rendered Long "a real and present threat of substantial harm to [him]self and/or others" as "evidenced through recent and overt acts";[10] Long had resisted Deputy Slaton's efforts to handcuff him; Long had commandeered a fully equipped, performance-enhanced police cruiser;

---

[10] The Petitioners attempt to analogize the mental state of the suspect in Smith with that of Bryan Long. However, it does not follow that the risk of harm from a suspect operating a stolen police cruiser while he is believed "to be somewhat impaired" by alcohol consumption is tantamount to the risk of harm from a suspect operating a stolen police cruiser that is, in fact, suffering from a "psychotic episode," who is by definition "a real and present threat of substantial harm" to himself or others as evidenced through recent and overt acts. Lynch; ALA. CODE §22-52-10.4(a).

and, Long had ignored Deputy Slaton's clear order to get out of the cruiser under threat of deadly force.[11] A psychotic suspect who had stolen a performance-enhanced police cruiser in the officer's presence and ignored a clear order to get out of the cruiser as the officer trained his weapon on him can hardly be described as "non-dangerous." Rather, Long's blatant disregard of his own life, as he ignored the lawful order of a law enforcement officer, gave Deputy Slaton reason to believe that Bryan Long would continue to risk his own life, or the lives of others, in further disregard of the law. Nothing in Long's actions suggested that, once he escaped in a performance-enhanced police cruiser, he would somehow transform into a law-abiding citizen who would observe the rules of the road and cautiously avoid any risk of harm to pedestrians or other drivers that he encountered on the road.[12]

The Eleventh Circuit noted "the obvious: Long could have quickly shifted gears and accelerated towards Deputy Slaton at any time. An objectively reasonable officer would have known this fact." Long, at 581 n.7. The Court further acknowledged that "[e]ven if we accept that the threat posed by Long to [11] The officer in Smith did not give any warning before he used deadly force. Smith, 430 F.3d at 770.

---

[12] Even if Deputy Slaton had been able to pursue the stolen performance-enhanced police cruiser, Long's behavior in no way indicated that he would abide by an officer's orders to stop the vehicle at some later time.

Deputy Slaton was not immediate in that the cruiser was not moving toward Slaton when shots were fired.... Long's unstable frame of mind, energetic evasion of the deputy's physical control, Long's criminal act of stealing a police cruiser, and Long's starting to drive – even after being warned of deadly force – to a public road gave the deputy reason to believe that Long was dangerous." Id. at 581-82. Accordingly, the Eleventh Circuit concluded that, under the specific circumstances that confronted Deputy Slaton, Bryan Long presented a "risk [of harm] that is not remote," from which Deputy Slaton had a legitimate "government interest" in "protecting the innocent public."[13] Id. at 582.

Despite the Eleventh Circuit's conclusion that Bryan Long presented a risk of harm that was not remote, the Petitioners, again, raise the false dichotomy between the risk of "potential danger" and the risk of "immediate danger." The Petitioners claim that "the Sixth Circuit assessed the threat at the time of the shooting as opposed to a potential future threat." (Pet. Brief, p.13.) Although the Sixth Circuit did conclude that, under the factual circumstances

---

[13] The Petitioners have ignored the Eleventh Circuit's conclusion that Bryan Long presented a "risk [of harm] that is not remote," because they argue before this Court that "[b]y focusing only on speculative future dangers Long might have posed to others – and by disregarding, if not conceding, that Bryan posed no immediate danger – the Eleventh Circuit's decision directly contradicts the Supreme Court's decisions in Scott and Garner." (Pet. Brief, p.8, emphasis added.)

then present, "there was no immediate danger to anyone in the vicinity," the Court did not consider the constitutionality of the officer's conduct in light of any risk of potential harm.[14] 430 F.3d at 773. However, at no point in its analysis did the Sixth Circuit recognize a distinction between a risk of "potential danger" and a risk of "immediate danger," and its holding certainly did not hinge on any such distinction. Rather, its holding was based on a lack of "evidence that Dunn had cause to believe that Smith posed an immediate risk of death or serious danger to Dunn, Rutherford, or nearby citizens."[15] Id. at 776. Absent any distinction between a risk of "potential danger" and a risk of "immediate danger," semantics notwithstanding, the Sixth Circuit's decision in Smith does not conflict with the Eleventh Circuit's decision in this case. The mere fact that the Sixth Circuit reached a different conclusion regarding the objective reasonableness of an officer's conduct in factual circumstances vastly different from those that Deputy [14] Despite the Petitioners' implications to the contrary, the Sixth Circuit's determination that the officer's use of force was unconstitutional absent a risk of "immediate harm" is not tantamount to holding that any risk of "potential harm" is insufficient to render the officer's conduct constitutional.

---

[15] Had the evidence shown that the suspect in Smith was a real and present threat of substantial harm to himself or others as evidenced through recent and overt acts, the Sixth Circuit would likely have reached a different conclusion.

Slaton confronted does not, alone, create a Circuit split.[16]

The Petitioners also cite Abraham v. Raso, 183 F.3d 279 (3rd Cir.1999), and Sigley v. Parma Heights, 437 F.3d 527 (6th Cir.2006), in an effort to establish a Circuit split regarding the purported distinction between a risk of "potential danger" and a risk of "immediate danger."[17] (Pet. Brief, pp.13-14.) In Abraham, [16] This Court has granted petitions for writ of certiorari to resolve Circuit splits on diverging conclusions of law, not applications of law to fact. See, e.g., Concrete Works of Colorado, Inc. v. City and County of Denver, Colo., 124 S.Ct. 556, 560, (2003) ("the case is worthy of the Court's review because it presents a clear Circuit split on the standard of appellate review for the 'strong basis in evidence' requirement"); Dooley v. Korean Air Lines Co., Ltd., 524 U.S. 116, 121 (1998) ("We granted certiorari...to resolve a Circuit split concerning the availability of a general maritime survival action in cases of death on the high seas"); Vimar Seguros y Reaseguros, S.A. v. M/V Sky Reefer, 515 U.S. 528, 532 (1995) ("We granted certiorari...to resolve a Circuit split on the enforceability of foreign arbitration clauses in maritime bills of lading"); City of Milwaukee v. Cement Div., Nat. Gypsum Co., 515 U.S. 189, 193-94 (1995) ("The Court of Appeals' decision deepened an existing Circuit split regarding the criteria for denying prejudgment interest in maritime collision cases"); H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., 492 U.S. 229, 251 (1989) ("[T]he District Courts and Courts of Appeals set out "to develop a meaningful concept of 'pattern,'"...and promptly produced the widest and most persistent Circuit split on an issue of federal law in recent memory") (Scalia, J., concurring).

---

[17] Although the Petitioners cite Tubar v. Clift, 453 F.Supp.2d 1252 (W.D.Wash. 2006), that case was not decided by a Circuit Court of Appeals and could not contribute to any Circuit split. The Petitioners also cite Estate of Starks v. Enyart, after an extensive analysis of the disputed and undisputed facts,[18] the Third Circuit held that "the undisputed facts are that Abraham had stolen some clothing, resisted arrest, hit or bumped into a car, and was reasonably believed to be intoxicated. Given these facts, a jury could quite reasonably conclude that Abraham did not pose a risk of death or serious bodily injury to others and that Raso could not reasonably believe that he did." Abraham at 293. In Sigley, the Sixth Circuit, likewise, conducted an extensive analysis of the disputed and undisputed facts,[19] and held that "[t]he conflicting views of the 5 F.3d 230 (7th Cir.1993), but, there, the Seventh Circuit did not even reach a conclusion about the constitutionality of the officer's actions, but dismissed the appeal for lack of jurisdiction. Enyart, 5 F.3d at 234. That holding cannot possibly conflict with the Eleventh Circuit's decision in this case.

(Continued on following page)

---

[18] The Third Circuit based its reversal of the District Court's qualified immunity analysis on the District Court's failure to properly construe the facts. See Abraham, 183 F.3d at 292 ("When the District Court found that Abraham posed a significant threat of death or serious physical injury to others, it emphasized the violence of Abraham's efforts to flee. In doing so, the District Court did not read the evidence in the light most favorable to the estate and failed to rely on the estate's version of events where there were genuine factual disputes").

[19] The Sixth Circuit, like the Third Circuit in Abraham, based its reversal of the District Court's qualified immunity analysis on the District Court's failure to properly construe the facts. See Sigley, 437 F.3d at 536 ("Viewing the evidence in a light most favorable to the Plaintiff, these are disputed factual issues that preclude the granting of summary judgment. See Sova [v. City of Mt. Pleasant], 142 F.3d [898] at 903 [(6th Cir.1998)] (holding that where there are contentious factual disputes relating to the reasonableness of an officer's use of facts demonstrate that there are unresolved factual issues regarding whether Mockler was chasing after Davis' car or the car was turning into him when he fired" and accordingly, "it is not clear whether Mockler had probable cause to believe that Davis posed a significant threat of death or serious physical injury to others." Sigley, 437 F.3d at 536.

(Continued on following page)

Neither of these cases recognizes any distinction between a risk of "potential danger" and a risk of "immediate danger," nor are their holdings premised on such a distinction. Rather, like Smith, their holdings are premised on the objective reasonableness of an officer's use of force in light of the specific factual circumstances he confronted. Further, like Smith, both of these cases were decided at the summary judgment stage, and their holdings are premised on the failure of the district court to properly construe disputed facts.

In the present case, the Eleventh Circuit had no disputed facts to construe, because the claims were adjudicated on a motion to dismiss. The facts that the Eleventh Circuit relied upon in this case were conceded by the Plaintiff: that Bryan Long was in the middle of a "psychotic episode," which by definition rendered Long "a real and present threat of substantial harm to [him]self or others" as "evidenced through recent and overt acts"; that Long had resisted Deputy deadly force, the court is precluded from granting summary judgment for officers who shot Plaintiff's son)").

---

Slaton's efforts to handcuff him; that Long had commandeered a performance-enhanced police cruiser; and, that Long had ignored Deputy Slaton's clear order to get out of the cruiser under threat of deadly force. Unlike either Abraham or Sigley, the Eleventh Circuit could determine from these undisputed facts that Deputy Slaton's use of force "was not outside the range of reasonableness in the light of the potential danger posed to officers and to the public if Long was allowed to flee in a stolen police cruiser." Long, 508 F.3d at 581. The mere fact that these Circuits reached different conclusions under vastly different factual circumstances at different stages of litigation does not create a Circuit split.

Finally, even if this Court were to accept the Petitioners' arguments that a Circuit split exists between the Eleventh Circuit's reasoning in this case the other circuit decisions cited by the Petitioners, the split has already been resolved. The Eleventh Circuit decided this case after Scott, and, in fact, relied upon this Court's decision there. Addressing the argument whether the police should have simply let the suspect escape, this Court stated in Scott "[w]e think the police need not have taken that chance and hoped for the best." Scott, 127 S.Ct. at 1778. The Petitioners contend that the cases they have cited, Smith, Sigley, and Starks, counsel the opposite conclusion this Court reached in Scott: that an officer must allow the suspect to escape and "hope for the best" where the threat of danger is not impending or "immediate," but is nevertheless "potential."[20] The Eleventh Circuit, on the other hand, followed this Court's reasoning in Scott and concluded that Deputy Slaton did not have to let Long go and "hope" he did not seriously injure or kill someone with a stolen police cruiser, because that threat of danger was, indeed real and present.[21] Long, 508 F.3d at 583 (quoting Scott, 127 S.Ct. at 1778). To the extent any split exists between the Eleventh Circuit's decision and the pre-Scott cases cited by the Petitioner, the split has already been resolved by this Court in Scott.

III. THE ELEVENTH CIRCUIT'S DECISION DOES NOT VIOLATE PUBLIC POLICY.

The Petitioners contend that, under the Eleventh Circuit's decision, "a reasonable officer may well conclude...that he may employ lethal force against any suspect who appears mentally unstable and is fleeing in an automobile, regardless of whether the suspect poses an immediate risk of serious danger to others." (Pet. Brief, pp.14-15, emphasis added.) This [20] It is not surprising that these cases, as interpreted by the Petitioner, reach an opposite conclusion that this Court reached in Scott; they all pre-date this Court's decision in Scott.

---

[21] The Eleventh Circuit's holding cannot be construed, as the Petitioners might suggest, that an officer may use deadly force to prevent a "speculative" threat of danger; the threat of danger recognized by the Eleventh Circuit was a real and present danger.

oversimplification of the Eleventh Circuit's decision mischaracterizes the basis for that decision and conflates the risk of danger posed by a "mentally ill fleeing suspect" and the risk of danger posed by a fleeing suspect who is "mentally ill" and "poses a real and present threat of substantial harm to himself or others" as "evidenced by a recent overt act." Compare Pet. Brief, pp.14-15 with ALA. CODE §22-52-10.4(a). The Eleventh Circuit based its conclusion that Deputy Slaton's use of force was reasonable on the fact that Deputy Slaton actually knew, rather than assumed, that Bryan Long was suffering from a psychotic episode and was determined by a medical doctor to be committable. Because Long could have been detained, pending a commitment hearing, Deputy Slaton had actual probable cause to believe that Long was "a real and present threat of substantial harm to [him]self or others" as "evidenced through recent and overt acts." That knowledge, combined with the fact that Long had resisted Deputy Slaton's efforts to handcuff him; that Long commandeered a fully equipped, performance-enhanced police cruiser; and, that Long ignored Deputy Slaton's clear order to get out of the cruiser under threat of deadly force, created an objective risk of danger to Deputy Slaton, or to the general public at large. The Fourth Amendment does not require that Deputy Slaton, under the circumstances he confronted, to let Long go and "hope for the best."[22]

---

[22] The real public policy implications of this case would arise in a conclusion contrary to the one reached by the Eleventh

(Continued on following page)

CONCLUSION

Based on the foregoing, Respondents Jimmie Ray Slaton, Jr. and Ronnie Willis respectfully request that this Court deny the Petition for Writ of Certiorari and affirm the decision of the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals.

Respectfully submitted this the 27th day of October, 2008.

KENDRICK E. WEBB
Counsel of Record
C. RICHARD HILL, JR.
JOSEPH L. HUBBARD, JR.
WEBB & ELEY, P.C.
7475 Halcyon Pointe Road
Post Office Box 240909
Montgomery, Alabama 36124
(334) 262-1850 Telephone
(334) 262-1889 Fax

Counsel for Respondents
Jimmie Ray Slaton, Jr. and
Ronnie Willis

Circuit. What would be the implication of holding that an officer must permit the escape of a suspect in the midst of a "psychotic episode," who poses a real and present threat of substantial harm to himself or others, after he resists arrest and commandeers a performance-enhanced police cruiser, despite clear and direct orders to get out of the cruiser under threat of deadly force? The Eleventh Circuit considered that question in its analysis of the Fourth Amendment issues in this case. See Long, at 582-83 (citing Scott, 127 S.Ct. at 1778, and fifteen other cases for the proposition that "[p]rotecting the innocent public from risks that are not remote is a government interest").